Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of newspaper reports that Mr. al Gahtari has escaped from police custody. We have asked the Bosnian authorities to look into these allegations as a matter of urgency. We have raised this case with the Bosnian authorities on a number of occasions, most recently when a Foreign Office official visited Sarajevo on 29 March. We have also been in touch via the Bosnian embassy in London and our missions in Geneva. We have reminded the Bosnian Government of our concern that their investigations into the murder of Mr. Goodall should be taken forward quickly and those responsible brought to justice. The Overseas Development Administration has been in contact with the judicial authorities in Zenica and has engaged the services of a local lawyer to represent the interests of Mr. Goodall's family.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information technology consultants his Department has employed, for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: Information technology consultants have been employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to provide expertise not available within the Department on a range of subjects. They have been used to give specialist advice on IT strategy development, communications, cabling, software development and support, project management, systems analysis, contingency planning, procurement and management information systems.

The total cost for each of the past five years starting in financial year 1989-90 was—£'000—1,744, 2,964, 3,412, 4,688 and 5,156.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state, in respect of each of the undertakings announced by the Prime Minister in his oral statement of 29 March, Official Report, columns 797-99, concerning the assent of Her Majesty's Government to the draft treaty on enlargement of the European Community and Union (a) in which document they are recorded and on whose authority, (b) where they may be obtained or examined, (c) if they are to be incorporated in whole or part in the draft treaty and (d) the nature of the additional post-statement communication from the European Commission to which he referred in his oral answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South of 30 March, Official Report, column 921.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The undertakings in the social field announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his statement of 29 March were oral assurances and are not recorded in a document. They will not therefore be incorporated, in whole or in part, in the draft treaty. The additional confirmation from the Commission to which my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary referred in his oral answer on 30 March took the form of contacts between his office and the office of Mr. Delors.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the response of the Arab League to the Libyan proposal that the two suspects in the Lockerbie incident be tried before the International Court of Justice in the Hague with Scottish judges sitting on the bench applying Scottish law; and what is now his policy on the suggestion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following its ministerial meeting in Cairo on 26 to 27 March, the Arab League issued a resolution urging the Security Council to consider this proposal.

Our policy on the suggestion was set out in a written reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 8 February 1994, Official Report, column 135.

Morocco

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government will make to the Moroccan Government to urge them to continue the United Nations-sponsored dialogue begun on 17 July 1993.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will continue to support the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General in the implementation of the United Nations settlement plan.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Moroccan Government concerning the disappearance of Saharawi people in the Moroccan-occupied Western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We were pleased to note the appointment of a Minister for Human Rights in Morocco last November. The Moroccan Government are aware of the importance we attach to human rights and we, together with our European Union partners, will urge them to continue the process of reform.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money Her Majesty's Government have spent financing the United Nations monitoring organisation MINURSO—the mission for the referendum in Western Sahara; and what benefits this has brought to United Kingdom taxpayers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has paid $8,265,226—£5.5 million—in United Nations-assessed contributions to MINURSO since the operation began in September 1991. In addition, the costs of the United Kingdom military contribution, withdrawn in October 1993, were: financial year 1991-92: £71,600; financial year 1992-93: £815,000; financial year 1993-94: £310,000.

A solution to the conflict in Western Sahara would enhance stability in the region, ease humanitarian suffering and offer potential international trade opportunities. All parties regard MINURSO's presence as instrumental to achieving an eventual settlement, hence the participation in the operation of Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Egypt, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Honduras, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Switzerland, Togo, Tunisia, Venezuela and, until the United Kingdom withdrawal, all five permanent members of the Security Council.

United Nations peacekeeping is an international obligation of member states, and is resourced according to internationally recognised criteria based upon national income.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what pressure Her Majesty's Government have put on the Moroccan Government since the ceasefire on 6 September.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Moroccan Government are aware of our wish to see progress towards the implementation of the United Nations settlement plan. We will maintain our position of strict neutrality in the dispute and continue to support the United Nations Secretary-General in his efforts to resolve outstanding problems, particularly those concerning identification and registration of those eligible to vote in the referendum.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government will be making to the Moroccan Government during the forthcoming signing of the GATT agreement concerning the abuse of human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Reception, Santiago

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost to Her Majesty's Government of the reception at the British embassy in Santiago attended by Lady Thatcher.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: About £1,400.

"The European Elections"

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of production and distribution of the pamphlet now being sent to the electorate entitled "The European Elections"; and what contribution to the cost was made from European Community funds.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Production and initial distribution costs amounted to £35,281. This covered the design, the printing of 100,000 copies and the mailing of 38,230 copies. An existing freephone facility is being used to respond to requests for further copies. Each request incurs a postage and handling charge which varies according to the number of booklets involved. Due to demand, a reprint of 150,000 copies has now been ordered at a cost of £11,007. European Comunity funds were not involved.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times General Pinochet has visited the British embassy in Santiago since 1990; and how many other meetings he has held either with embassy staff and officials or at which the embassy was represented over the same period.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: General Pinochet attended a recent reception in honour of Lady Thatcher at our ambassador's residence, but has never visited the embassy.

Our ambassador called on General Pinochet, who is commander in chief of the army, during his initial courtesy calls. His predecessor paid one similar call.

Our defence attaché has met General Pinochet twice in the course of routine duties.

Stability Pact (Inaugural Conference)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether a date has been fixed for the inaugural conference of the stability pact to be convened in Paris by the European Union according to the decisions taken at the European Council in Brussels on 10-11 December 1993; which Ministers will represent the United Kingdom; and what the agenda will be at that conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The inaugural conference of the stability pact will be held in Paris from 26 to 27 May 1994 at Foreign Minister level. All countries which participate in CSCE meetings will be invited. United Kingdom representation has still to be decided. The agenda for the conference has not yet been finalised; preparations are continuing in consultation with a wide range of countries.

European Communities Act 1972

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask Parliament to ammend article 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 to make inapplicable, in the United Kingdom, without consent of Parliament, any decision of the EEC to which the United Kingdom is opposed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. To amend article 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 in this manner would put the United Kingdom in breach of its international treaty obligations.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current military situation in Sierra Leone and its effect on displaced people and refugees and the work of aid agencies, with particular reference to British agencies in the country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The recent intensification of attacks by rebels in the east and south-east of the country has forced the movement of rural inhabitants into larger towns and camps. On 12 March a convoy of clearly-marked Catholic mission and hospital vehicles was ambushed, and an Irish priest, a Dutch doctor and his family were killed. As a result, most British aid agencies have withdrawn expatriate workers from the area. At least one agency has withdrawn both expatriate and local staff.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a direct contribution to the funds of political parties in Mozambique for political training and the development of political structures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 21 March 1994]: The Rome peace accords, endorsed by the international community, envisaged assistance to allow RENAMO to participate in the elections as an essential step towards democracy.

We propose to help with the democratic process in Mozambique by contributing £500,000 to the United Nations trust fund for the implementation of the peace process in Mozambique. Our contribution is subject to confirmation of the agreement of the Government of Mozambique. Several other major donors are already contributing.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Premature Mortality

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the latest studies funded by the Economic and Social Research Council of causes of premature mortality related to (a) environmental pollution, (b) deprived material conditions of work and (c) other forms of material deprivation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest studies funded by the Economic and Social Research Council of causes of premature mortality related to (a) environmental pollution, (b) deprived material conditions of work and (c) other forms of material deprivation are as follows:

a. Environmental Pollution

The Effects of Warmer Winters on Morbidity and Mortality in Great Britain;

Climate Change Melanoma Risk and Exposure to Ultraviolet Radiation.

Climate Change and Human Health: A Review;

Climate Change and the Incidence and Costs of Food Poisoning in England and Wales.

ESRC-funded Centre for Social and Economic Research on the Global Environment (co-located at University College London and the University of East Anglia).

b. Deprived Material Conditions of Work

There are no projects specifically dealing with the relation between mortality and deprived conditions of work although employment is an aspect of much of the more general research on deprivation and mortality which is listed under (c).

c. Other Forms of Material Deprivation

The Health of an Invisible Minority: The Irish in Britain

In addition to the above studies funded by the Economic and Social Research Council, further work is also being financed by the Medical Research Council on issues referred to in this parliamentary question. The Department of Health and the universities may also be funding some research which may be relevant.

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the latest studies funded by the Medical Research Council of causes of premature mortality related to (a) environmental pollution, (b) deprived material conditions of work and (c) other forms of material deprivation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest studies funded by the Medical Research Council of causes of premature mortality related to (a) environmental pollution, (b) deprived material conditions of work and (c) other forms of material deprivation are as follows:

(a) Environmental Pollution

The MRC Environmental Epidemiology Unit in Southampton:

(i) Carcinogenicity of pesticides and styrene.

(ii) exposure to aluminium in drinking water and possible association with an increased risk of Alzheimer's disease.

The MRC Cell Mutation Unit (University of Sussex, Brighton, and the MRC Toxicology Unit in Leicester jointly):
Mutant frequency in individuals exposed to petrochemicals as a result of the Braer oil spillage.

(b) Deprived Material Conditions of Work

The MRC Environmental Epidemiology Unit in Southampton:

(i) the possible association between the risk of leukaemia and lymphoma and father's occupational exposure to radiation.

(ii) The possible link between papillomavirus and lung cancer in butchers.

(iii) the relation of mortality to specific aspects of work in submariners.

(iv) whether exposure to mineral acid mists poses an important risk to health.

(v) incidence of cancer in molecular biology research workers.

(vi) mortality and cancer incidence of workers from a paper mill.

(vii) respiratory disease in radiographers.

(viii) national analysis of occupational mortality.

The MRC Cell Mutation Unit (University of Sussex, Brighton): Mutant frequencies in workers exposed to low levels of radiation in the nuclear industry.

The MRC Radiobiology Unit:
The effects of alpha radiation on haemopoietic stem cells in the context of radiation leukaemogenesis.

The Department of Epidemiology and Public Health, University College and Middlesex School of Medicine:
Possible explanations for the observation that civil servants in the lowest grades have higher levels of heart disease, chronic bronchitis, diabetes and other illnesses.

c) Other Forms of Material Deprivation

The MRC Cell Mutation Unit (University of Sussex, Brighton):
Mutant frequency in the parents of children who have developed leukaemia.

MRC Medical Sociology Unit in Glasgow:
The differences in morbidity and mortality at the national level between areas of residence.

Department of Public Health and Primary Care, Gibson Laboratories, Oxford:
An investigation of cancer mortality in the vicinity of nuclear establishments in England and Wales.

The H. H. Wills Physics Laboratory, University of Bristol—

MRC supported research:
Possible links between exposure to domestic radon and various non-lung cancers.

In addition to the above studies funded by the Medical Research Council, further work is also being financed by the Economic and Social Research Council on issues referred to in this parliamentary question. The Department of Health and universities may also be funding some research which may be relevant.

Charter Forums

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the dates and venues of meetings of the charter forums and the number of people who attended.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is set out in the table:

Date	Venue	[1]Attendance
21 June 1993	Manchester	226
5 July 1993	Birmingham	190
12 October 1993	Newcastle	174
15 October 1993	Bristol	163
2 November 1993	Nottingham	144
9 November 1993	Cardiff	163
24 November 1993	Southampton	155
20 December 1993	Edinburgh	286
10 March 1994	Leeds	148

[1] Registered audience. Totals exclude forum organisers and Cabinet Office staff who attended.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he gave to the implication for parliamentary questions in preparing his revised draft code of practice on Government information section XV.

Mr. Waldegrave: The code of practice on access to Government information has no implications for the practice of the House concerning parliamentary questions. The draft code published in Cm 2290 included in exemption (xv) a reference to information which could not be sought in a parliamentary question. This has been dropped in the final version of the code, which I announced on 29 March Official Report, columns 608-9. Many members of the public using the code will not be familiar with parliamentary practice on admissibility of questions as described in "Erskine May". Furthermore, the code covers requests for information which may be addressed directly to non-ministerial departments and public bodies, in respect of which the rules on admissibility would be irrelevant.

Civil Estate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the results of the Efficiency Unit's multi-departmental scrutiny of the management of the Government's civil estate.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am currently considering the report of the scrutiny with my colleagues and will announce the Government's conclusions as soon as possible.

NHS Estate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the efficiency unit has to scrutinise the management of the NHS estate.

Mr. Waldegrave: The efficiency unit has been consulted about the current three-year review of the NHS Estates Agency, but plans no efficiency scrutiny in this area.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total cost of official entertaining in his Department in each year since April 1992; if he will list the receptions held in each year at his Department's expense; and what was the cost of each reception.

Mr. Waldegrave: Expenditure on official entertaining in 1992-93 and between April 1993 and February 1994 was as follows:

	1992-93 £	April 1993 to February 1994 £
Cabinet Office/Office of Public Service and Science (excluding the Prime Minister's Office)	[1]99,000	47,300
COI	4,640	5,680
HMSO[2]	16,000	21,950

[1] Includes £59,000 relating to the launch of Chessington Computer Centre as an executive agency.
[2] Figures for HMSO cover the calendar years 1992 and 1993.

The entertainment budget is used for a variety of functions including receptions. Separate figures for individual functions are not kept centrally.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what computer systems his Department have brought in, for what function, and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case if the computer system is still in use.

Mr. David Davis: My department has no computer systems which are common to the whole of OPSS and its associated agencies. Networked office automation systems are, however, widely implemented across the Department. Costs for these systems, for the last five years, are as follows:

1991-92	2·3
1993-94	1·2

The figures above incorporate the total IT systems expenditure by OPSS Agencies. The cost of systems to support more specific business functions in the agencies, such as recruitment, training, financial management and payroll are therefore included.

1990-91	411,000
1991-92	95,000
1993-94	79,000

All of the above systems are still in use, although many have been upgraded and enhanced during the period in question.

Costs for information technology systems for HMSO are not readily available because of the decentralised nature of their operations.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information technology consultants his Department has employed in each of the last five years; for what purpose; and at what total cost.

Mr. David Davis: My department has placed a large number of information technology consultancy contracts during the last five years. It is impossible to give a brief summary; I will however write to the hon. Member.

I regret that the costs of IT consultancy are not separately identifiable within my Department's overall expenditure on consultancy and related services.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Staff

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee (1) what is the limit on the number of passes hon. Members can have for their staff; when this was agreed; and if the Administration Committee will now review the number;

(2) what appeal an hon. Member has if an additional staff pass is refused by the Serjeant at Arms.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: On 30 January 1989 the House agreed to recommendations contained in the Second Report from the House of Commons Services Committee of Session 1987-88 that, in general, no Member should be entitled to apply for a photo-identity pass for more than three individual members of their personal staff; and that those limits should not be transferable. Any appeal against those rules should be submitted to the Administration Committee. The Committee has no immediate plans to review these arrangements.

Telephone Facilities

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee (1) if he will call for a report into why it was impossible to ring central Liverpool from the House on Tuesday 29 March; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for how long the telephone connection between the House and central Liverpool was unavailable on Tuesday 29 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I have been asked to reply. This is a matter for the Communications Manager.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what were the 10 most expensive answers to parliamentary questions answered in the past 10 years for which calculations have been made; and what was their total cost.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 1 February 1994]: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Birmingham

Q8. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister when he next plans to visit the city of Birmingham.

The Prime Minister: As part of my programme of regional tours to all parts of the country I had the pleasure of visiting Birmingham only yesterday.

Efficiency Unit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many hours per week his adviser on efficiency spends on matters (a) relating to work of the Efficiency Unit and (b) relating to competition and purchasing.

The Prime Minister: The time my adviser devotes to matters relating to efficiency scrutinies on the one hand and competition and purchasing on the other, and the split between the two, depends on the matters which arise or are referred to him for advice.

European Community Treaties (Veto)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer following his statement on 29 March, Official Report, column 806, if he will list each of the extant treaties of the European Community and cite the relevant articles therein that provide Her Majesty's Government with veto powers other than those linked to the Luxembourg declaration.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom effectively has a veto in areas where decisions are taken by unanimity. Unanimity applies under the following articles of the treaty of Rome, as amended by subsequent treaties:

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what requests he has made in his recent dicussions with the Indian Prime Minister for an all-party delegation of hon. Members to be allowed to visit the Indian-administered area of Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I discussed the issue of access to Kashmir in general terms with the Indian Prime Minister when I met him on 14 March. I welcome the recent visit to Kashmir by some United Kingdom parliamentarians. We have frequently urged the Indian Government to allow visits by independent observers and human rights groups to Kashmir.

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what proportion of the funds so far allocated as part of his Darwin initiative meet the recommendation of his advisory committee that projects are carried out in co-operation with local people.

The Prime Minister: There are currently 53 projects being funded under the Darwin initiative in almost 40 countries. All the projects involve collaboration with local universities and institutions, conservation organisations or individuals.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the basis of evidence available to Her Majesty's Government in relation to alleged Libyan involvement in the destruction of Pan Am 103, which has provided the foundation on which the Secretary of State for Scotland has initiated legal action against the insurers of Pan Am in relation to alleged negligence at the Rhein-Main airport in Frankfurt.

The Prime Minister: The civil action is against Pan American World Airways Inc. for damage to the A74 at Lockerbie caused by the destruction of its aircraft. The action is concerned with alleged negligence by Pan American World Airways Inc. and not with alleged Libyan involvement in the destruction of the aircraft. The action is currently being settled.

Tigris and Euphrates Valleys

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what medical advice has gone to Her Majesty's Government from agencies of the United Nations and Medecins sans Frontieres about malnutrition-related disease, the lack of pharmaceuticals and the shortage of water-pump and water-filter equipment in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates.

The Prime Minister: We receive general reports on the humanitarian needs in Iraq from the United Nations agencies and others, although not from Medecins Sans Frontieres. I understand that researchers' attempts to assess nutrition in Iraq have been hampered by a lack of reliable data.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 April.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Political Advisers

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Prime Minister how many political advisers were employed by Cabinet Ministers in each year since 1979; and what was the cost of these advisers in constant 1994 prices.

The Prime Minister: The information requested has not been collected centrally at regular intervals. Information available on the number of special advisers, including expert advisers' total pay bills and aggregate figures, is as follows:

Table 1: Number of special advisers

As at:
March 1994	39
May 1993	42

Lords Lieutenant

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 803, (1) how much is paid from public funds to lords lieutenant towards the cost of their ceremonial uniform; (2) how much is paid from public funds to lords lieutenant towards the cost of their ceremonial uniforms.

The Prime Minister: In 1993 the total contribution paid from public funds to lords lieutenant on appointment towards the cost of their ceremonial uniforms was £4,952·07. In 1992 the figure was £6,932·50.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to advertise vacancies as and when they arise for lords lieutenant and deputy lords lieutenant in the relevant regional and local press.

The Prime Minister: No. Lords lieutenant are appointed by Her Majesty the Queen on my advice under Crown prerogative. The choice of deputy lieutenants lies in the hands of the lords lieutenant.

Official Gifts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report column 788, if he will give a breakdown of the £18,385 spent on official gifts in 1993 giving a description and the recipient.

The Prime Minister: A range of small gifts were given to a large number of individuals for official purposes.

National Insurance

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) of 29 March, Official Report, column 794, who is the right hon. Friend to whom he makes reference.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister whether all documents requested by Lord Justice Scott from Ministers or departmental officials have now been provided to the inquiry.

The Prime Minister: Yes, although a number of oral hearings are scheduled to take place in May and the provison of further documents and material to the inquiry will continue.

EU Rights and Objectives

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Foreign Office in asserting British interests in Europe and defending the British case in conflicts over EU rights and objectives.

The Prime Minister: I have every confidence in the ability of the Foreign Office to further British interests in Europe.

British Manufacturing and Research Company

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister which departments or Government agencies hold papers or records relating to the affairs of the British Manufacturing and Research Company.

The Prime Minister: Records of this company are held by Companies House, an executive agency of the Department of Trade and Industry.

General Election

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will introduce legislation to ensure that a general election will occur if a Prime Minister resigns or is defeated in a party leadership contest.

The Prime Minister: No.

EC Commission

Mr. Shore: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement on 29 March, Official Report, columns 797-98, whether he will publish (a) the text of the oral or written assurances given by the Commission that proposals under the social chapter will not embrace in any way people or organisations in the United Kingdom and (b) the text of any Council of Ministers declaration that it is under a legal and binding obligation to seek agreement on the basis of a minority of at least 23 votes.

The Prime Minister: On (a), I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 30 March. On (b), the text of the Council decision on qualified majority voting has already been deposited in the House.

TREASURY

Listed Building Repairs (VAT)

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to alter the rate of value added tax on repairs to listed buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: We have no plans to change the present rate of VAT of 17½ per cent. on repairs to listed buildings.

Bank Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times in 1990, 1991 and 1992 bank auditors notified the Bank of England of suspected fraud and irregularities.

Mr. Nelson: The term "suspected fraud and irregularities" is capable of being interpreted in different ways. But on the basis of a reasonable interpretation, the Bank of England advises that the number of notifications in those years was as follows:

	Number
1992	0

I cannot, of course, comment on the details of any particular supervisory case as such information is covered by part V of the Banking Act 1987.

Public Appointments

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations and individuals who have been asked, since June 1992, to submit names of individuals to be considered for appointments to paid and unpaid posts for which a Minister has to approve the person or shortlist for the appointment.

Mr. Nelson: The following organisations have been asked, since June 1992, to submit names of individuals to be considered for appointments to paid and unpaid posts for which a Minister has to approve the person or shortlist for the appointment:

Public Appointments Unit

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many, and what percentage of officers in each of grades 1 to 7 and overall in his Department are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities and (c) disabled, respectively.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is set out in the table. Figures at (a) and (c) represent the position as at 1 January 1994. Figures for (b) refer to respondents to the Department's ethnic monitoring survey. Figures for (c) are available only for those staff who are registered disabled. The Department employs a number of people with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Proton Cars

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Proton cars were purchased by his Departments in each of the last 10 years for which information is available; and at what cost.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the net receipts for inheritance tax in each year since 1986.

Mr. Nelson: The net receipts for inheritance tax in each financial year since 1986-87 are:

1986-87	995
1987-88	1,078
1988-89	1,071
1989-90	1,232
1990-91	1,262
1991-92	1,299
1992-93	1,211
[1]1993-94	1,290

[1] Provisional estimate.

The figures include receipts from capital transfer tax and estate duty.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 of exempting most family businesses from inheritance tax;

(2) if he will estimate the value of inheritance tax revenues forgone by the Inland Revenue through exemptions and reliefs for (a) business property, (b) agricultural land, (c) woodlands, (d) works of art and (e) historic houses.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated costs of granting relief against inheritance tax for transfers in 1993-94 for the various categories are:

	£ million[1]
(a) Business property	55
(b) Agricultural land	70
(c) Woodlands	negligible

[1]Estimates rounded to nearest £5 million.

Separate estimates for relief for family business are not available: such relief is contained within the estimates for business and agricultural reliefs.

The estimated annual cost of exemptions and reliefs from inheritance tax for heritage property shows significant fluctuations from year to year. Over the past decade the average annual cost has been:

	£ million[1]
(d) Works of Art	80
(e) Land and Buildings	10

[1]Estimates rounded to nearest £5 million.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value of inheritance tax revenues lost by the Exchequer through the use of (a) lifetime gifts and (b) offshore trusts.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested on these transfers is not kept because these transfers fall outside the inheritance tax charge.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of estates in the United Kingdom are liable to inheritance tax.

Mr. Nelson: It is estimated that of estates passing on death in the United Kingdom in 1993-94, about 3 per cent. are liable to inheritance tax.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value of inheritance tax revenues lost by the Inland Revenue each year through the creation of discretionary trusts made during a donor's lifetime.

Mr. Nelson: Lifetime transfers into most discretionary trusts are subject to a charge to inheritance tax at half death rates, and a top-up charge should the donor die within seven years of such transfers. Most discretionary trusts are also subject to a further charge to inheritance tax every 10 years. The purpose of this regime is to ensure that the tax payable on property passing into discretionary trusts is broadly equivalent to the tax payable if it had passed on death. There is no evidence to suggest that, overall, any inheritance tax is lost through the creation of discretionary trusts.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 of raising the relief from inheritance tax from 30 per cent. to 50 per cent. for (i) shareholdings of 25 per cent. or less in unquoted companies, (ii) agricultural landlords, (iii) smaller shareholdings in unlisted securities market companies and (iv) controlling shareholdings in quoted companies.

Mr. Nelson: Under the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992, business assets and farmland which previously qualified for 30 per cent. relief from inheritance tax were granted 50 per cent. relief. Relief at 50 per cent. was also extended to holdings of 25 per cent. or less without control in unlisted securities market companies which previously did not qualify for relief. The combined costs of these changes are about £5 million in a full year. Separate costs for the different categories in terms of receipts in 1992-93 and 1993-94 are all negligible. No change was made to the 50 per cent. relief received by controlling holdings in fully quoted companies.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total value of all property that changes ownership in one year as a result of the death of the previous owner; and what proportion of this is subject to inheritance tax.

Mr. Nelson: For estates passing on death in 1989-90, the most recent year for which figures are available, the total value of property that changed ownership as a result of the death of the previous owner is estimated to be in the region of £25 to £30 billion. Inheritance tax was charged on about £3 billion of this value.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer in (a) 1992-93, (b) 1993-94 and (c) 1994-95 of raising the threshold for inheritance tax to £150,000.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated costs to the Exchequer of raising the threshold for inheritance tax to £150,000 in 1992-93, measured against an indexed base, are:

Year	£ million
1993-94	15
1994-95	20

Income Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number and percentage of basic rate and higher rate taxpayers in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) West Yorkshire, (d) Humberside and (e) the United Kingdom for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The table provides estimates for 1991-92, the latest available year for which information can be provided below the United Kingdom level. Estimates of MIRAS are unreliable at county and regional level and have been excluded from the calculation of tax liability for the counties in the table, and for the United Kingdom for consistency.

	Taxpayers liable at only basic rate		Taxpayers liable at higher rate
	000s	Per cent.	000s	Per cent.
South Yorkshire	505	97·2	14	2·8
North Yorkshire	359	93·7	24	6·3
West Yorkshire	862	95·9	37	4·1
Humberside	327	94·8	18	5·2
United Kingdom	24,800	93·9	1,620	6·1

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates to be the total cost in 1994-95 of tax expenditures on (a) relief for occupational pension schemes, (b) contributions to personal pensions, (c) mortgage interest, (d) contracted-out rebate for occupational schemes and personal pensions, (e) married couple's allowance, (f) capital allowances for income tax and corporation tax and (g) inheritance tax transfers not exceeding £150,000.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for 1994-95 are as follows:

	£ million
Relief for:
Occupational pension schemes	[1]7,100
Contributions to personal pensions (including retirement annuity premia and FSAVCs)	1,700
Mortgage interest[2]	3,400
Contracted-out rebate for occupational schemes and personal pensions	7,400
Married couple's allowance	3,500
Capital allowances for income tax and corporation tax	[1]14,400
Inheritance tax nil rate band for transfers not exceeding £150,000	[1]4,400

[2] This figure is based on the conventional assumption that mortgage interest rates remain at their current levels.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on the average family's tax bill of the Budget changes in the married couple's income tax allowance and mortgage interest relief.

Mr. Dorrell: A basic rate taxpayer in receipt of the married couple's allowance will pay £86 more in income tax in 1994-95 following its restriction to 20 per cent. Mortgage interest relief does not in general depend on the income of the mortgagor. It is estimated that the average size of mortgages in the United Kingdom will be greater than the qualifying maximum of £30,000. Assuming current levels of mortgage interest rates, the reduction in relief on the mortgage of £30,000 or over will be £115·50 in 1994-95.

Pension Schemes (Tax Relief)

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his estimates for 1993-94 and 1996-97 of the cost of tax relief for investment income of (a) occupational pension schemes and (b) personal pension schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: A provisional cost of income tax relief, assuming relief at the basic rate of tax, for the investment income of occupational pension schemes is estimated to be about £5·1 billion in 1993-94. The cost for 1996-97 will depend on future levels of investment, rates of return and tax rates. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the cost of exemption for investment income related to retirement annuity contracts and personal pensions.

Taxpayers (Age)

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers are aged over 64 years; and how many of them pay tax at the higher marginal rate.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated number of taxpayers aged 65 or over in 1994-95 is about 3 million. Of these, about 150,000 will be liable at the higher rate.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Acts of Parliament and Consolidation Acts that affect local government which have been introduced by his Department since 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: My Departments have not introduced any Acts of Parliament since 1990 which are specific to local government. They have, however, introduced Acts containing measures that have been general in their application and will consequently have affected local government in common with other organisations.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the statutory, professional, self-regulatory, trade associations and other organisations which are recognised as regulatory bodies under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Nelson: The following are recognised by the Securities and Investments Board under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Self-regulating Organisations (SROs):
Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association (FIMBRA)
Investment Management Regulatory Organisation (IMRO)
Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation (LAUTRO)
The Securities and Futures Authority (SFA)

Recognised Professional Bodies:
Chartered Association of Certified Accountants (ACCA)
Institute of Actuaries
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales (ICAEW)
Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland
Institute of Chartered Accountants in Scotland
Insurance Brokers' Registration Council (IBRC)
Law Society
Law Society of Northern Ireland
Law Society of Scotland

Recognised UK Investment Exchanges:
International Stock Exchange of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland Ltd
London International Financial Futures Exchange (LIFFE)
London Metal Exchange (LME)
London Commodity Exchange (LCE)
International Petroleum Exchange (IPE)
OMLX London Securities and Derivatives Exchange (OMLX)

Recognised Clearing Houses:
London Clearing House (LCH)

The following recognised overseas investment exchanges are recognised by the Treasury:
Chicago Mercantile Exchange (CME)
Chicago Board of Trade (CBOT)
National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotations (NASDAQ)
New York Mercantile Exchange (NYMEX)
Sydney Futures Exchange (SFE)
Mercado de Futuros Financieros Sociedad Rectora de Productos Financieros Derivados de Renta Fija (MEFF RF)
Mercados de Futuros Financieros Sociedad Rectora de Productos Financieros Derivados de Renta Variable (MEFF RV)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent fines imposed by regulatory bodies created by the Financial Services Act 1986 are deductible for tax; and what representations he has received on this point.

Mr. Dorrell: The general rule when calculating trading profits for tax purposes is that revenue expenditure incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade is an allowable deduction. Expenditure incurred on a fine imposed as a result of a trader committing an infraction would not be incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade.

No representations have been received on this point.

National Savings

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what restrictions apply to the use of Post Office National Savings accounts by people who cannot sign their names due to mental impairment; and what arrangements may be made for such people living in local authority care to have access to their savings in such accounts.

Mr. Nelson: National Savings ordinary and investment accounts can be opened for mentally disordered persons but only where a receiver has been appointed by the Court of Protection. The receiver will have full control over the management of the account.

Where an account has been opened and the despositor subsequently becomes mentally disordered, National Savings will describe to the applicant the Court of Protection facility but explain that where the balance in the account is £3,000 or less the director of savings has discretion to allow withdrawals from the account where it is considered in the patient's interest and the payment is being made to a proper person.

In cases where the account balance is greater than £3,000 the applicant will be referred to the Court of Protection but the director of savings will offer the facility of discretionary payments to meet immediate needs until a Court of Protection order is issued.

Where there is any doubt in a particular case the matter can be raised with the Public Trust Office. The overriding consideration must be the interests of the patient.

Derivatives and Swaps

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax revenues obtained from the derivatives and swaps markets in the United Kingdom; how those revenues are obtained; and whether he has the taxation of such markets under review.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not possible to attribute amounts of tax to specific types of income or gain because tax is charged on each business's total profits, including income and capital gains.

Proposals to reform the tax treatment of financial instruments used by companies for managing interest rate and currency risk were announced in the Budget in November and are included in the present Finance Bill. These proposals will replace the current complex rules with a simple and coherent regime for taxing the profits and losses associated with these instruments.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to review the need for regulation of markets in derivatives and swaps; and what steps he has taken to discuss these issues with the Government of the United States of America or with bank and securities regulators both in Britain and the United States of America.

Mr. Nelson: Regulation of markets in derivatives and of institutions involved in derivatives trading in the United Kingdom is the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board and other bodies recognised under the Financial Services Act 1986, and of the Bank of England and the Building Societies Commission. Representatives of the United Kingdom authorities regularly meet and discuss derivatives trading with their counterparts from other countries, including the United States, in fora such as the Basle Committee on Banking Supervision and the International Organisation of Securities Commissions, as well as on a bilateral basis as appropriate. In addition, the Securities and Investments Board recently agreed, with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, a co-ordinated approach to the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what computer systems his Department have brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Nelson: At the end of financial year 1991-92 the Treasury bought a building and asset management system by Ground Modelling Systems for £87,000. First-year maintenance and installation were included in this price. Maintenance in 1993-94 cost £10,000. The system is operational and usage is expanding as more classes of data are entered into it.

In 1992 the Treasury introduced a library system by Dynix. The capital cost of the system was £88,000; 80 per cent. was paid in 1991-92, and 20 per cent. upon completion in early 1992-93. Maintenance costs of the system were £4,000 in 1992-93 and £10,000 in 1993-94. The system is still fully operational and in use.

At the end of the financial year 1993-94 the Treasury invested £50,000 in a DIP—document image processing—pilot project. This system, which required a mixture of purchasing, leasing and utilising existing assets, is operational and is being used to assess the potential uses of DIP technology for the Department.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many inspectors were employed on corporation tax technical review in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: Excluding inspectors employed in specialist offices, the table sets out the total resource input into corporation tax technical review by inspectors working in the Inland Revenue's network of local offices for each of the years since 1991-92:

	Man years
1991-92	745
1993-94	749

The final figure for the year 1993-94 is not yet available. The figure quoted is based on resource usage for the nine months to January 1994 annualised. The final figure for the year is likely to be higher because the period from January to April tends to be a period when comparatively little annual leave is taken and more time is available for technical review.

Credit for Tax Sparing

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of revenue forgone through the granting of matching credit for tax sparing for the latest year available.

Mr. Dorrell: The information on which to base such an estimate is not available.

Travellers Charter

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much Her Majesty's Customs and Excise travellers charter cost to (a) print and (b) distribute; and what analysis he has made of the value for money of publishing this charter.

Sir John Cope: The total cost of designing and printing the charter has been some £60,000. Commercial distribution has cost some £3,000, but internal distribution costs cannot be calculated without disproportionate expense.

The travellers charter sets standards of service to be provided and allows Customs to monitor and improve performance against those standards. The value of the charter cannot be measured in monetary terms. However, I consider it to make a worth while and effective contribution to our efforts to improve the standard of public services.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many collection staff were working for the Inland Revenue in each year since 1979, including 1993; and how many were working in the areas of (a) capital gains tax, (b) schedule D tax, (c) corporation tax, (d) PAYE and (e) national insurance contributions in each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures relating to the number of staff employed by the Inland Revenue are compiled on a financial year basis and the most recent year for which information is available is 1992-93.

Excluding staff employed on central administration, the table sets out the total numbers of Inland Revenue staff engaged on the collection of tax within the Department's accounts offices, local office network, and enforcement offices for each year from 1978-79 to 1992-93 inclusive and the numbers working in the areas of (a) capital gains tax, (b) schedule D tax, (c) corporation tax, and (d) PAYE in each year. Under (d) the figures include staff used in collecting PAYE from employers and a relatively small number of schedule E tax assessments. As resources usage on national insurance contribution work is incidental to mainstream tax collection it is not separately recorded.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts his Department has had with consultants; and what has been the total cost in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 March 1994]: I regret that information going back beyond 1991 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The table gives the number and value of consultancy contracts awarded by HM Treasury by financial year from 1991-92 to date. Some information is only available from August 1991. In addition, the Department has also incurred expenditure on professional fees in connection with the privatisation programme. These are shown separately.

Civil Servants

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each civil service grade in his Departments the number of (a) male and (b) female, (i) full-time and (ii) part-time employees.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 28 March 1994]: The information requested is set out in the tables for each of the Chancellor's Departments.

Accommodation (Tax)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the amount of the deduction or the market rental value of the accommodation is used to calculate the tax due when assessing the value for tax purposes of accommodation provided as part of salary.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 29 March 1994]: Employees who choose to spend part of the wages to which they are entitled on accommodation from their employer remain taxable on their full wages.

Employees who have living accommodation provided by reason of their employment are liable to tax on the value of the accommodation, subject to certain statutory exemptions. The value of the accommodation for tax purposes is the annual value of the property or the rent paid for it if that is greater. Annual value is defined in the same way as the annual value which was formerly used for rating purposes and the figures taken for income tax purposes is usually the same as the gross value last used for rating purposes. There is an additional charge for certain properties which cost more than £75,000.

The basis of valuation of living accommodation provided by reason of an employment is currently being reviewed to find a practical replacement for figures from rating lists.

Inflation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current annual rate of inflation; and in which year inflation was last lower.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 31 March 1994]: In February the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments was 2·8 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Other than in November and December 1993 the inflation rate was last lower in January 1968, when it was 2·6 per cent.

International Monetary Fund (Russia)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the full terms of the latest agreement between the International Monetary Fund and Russia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 31 March 1994]: A joint communiqué was issued on 22 March by the managing director of the IMF and the Russian Prime Minister announcing that agreement would soon be reached on the terms for the disbursement of the second tranche of the systemic transformation facility—$1·5 billion. Those terms were to be outlined in a Russian Government memorandum of economic policy to be presented to the IMF. As yet, that memorandum has not been finalised.

I very much welcome the progress made towards agreement between the Russian Government and the IMF.

Income Statistics

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage change in real disposable income between February 1974 and May 1979; and what it has been since May 1979.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 31 March 1994]: Figures for real personal disposable income are available only quarterly. The total increase in RPDI between the first quarter of 1974 and the second quarter of 1979 was nearly 11 per cent. The total increase in RPDI between the second quarter of 1979 and the fourth quarter of 1993 was 42 per cent.

Forward Catering

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what price was paid for Forward Catering; and what provision was made in the sale agreement for financial responsibility for redundancies.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 31 March 1994]: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 15 February, column 703. The sale agreement provided for the purchaser to indemnify the Treasury from all costs arising from the termination of employment of employees after the transfer date.

Bank Rate

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current bank rate of interest; and in which year it was last lower.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 31 March 1994]: Base rates now stand at 5¼ per cent. Base rates have not been lower since 1972.

EU Growth Rate

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth rate in each EU country in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the estimated growth rates for 1994.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 31 March 1994]: Estimates for 1993 are available in table 2 of the annual economic report of the European Commission. The most recent country-by-country Commission forecasts for 1994 were published in table 10 of "European Economy", edition No. 55. These figures show that the United Kingdom had the fastest growth rate in the Community in 1993 and is expected to grow faster than any other major EC country in 1994.

EMPLOYMENT

Building Projects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what major building projects valued at over £1 million are being or have been wholly or partly financed since 1989 in (a) Doncaster, (b) Barnsley, (c) Rotherham and (d) Wakefield by his Department; and what was the cost of each project to his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None so far as the Department, the Health and Safety Executive and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service are concerned. In the case of the Employment Service agency, responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. G. Johnson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 12 April 1994:

The Minister of State for Employment has asked me to reply to your question about major building projects valued at over £1m which are being, or have been, wholly or partly financed by the Employment Service since 1989 at Doncaster, Barnsley, Rotherham and Wakefield. I am replying in the Chief Executive's absence.

The Employment Service (ES) has commissioned three projects which meet the criteria set out in your question. The details are:

a. Doncaster—No projects.

b. Barnsley—A private developer built the ES Jobcentre to our specification and it was subsequently rented. ES expenditure on fitting out the building was £423,000. The total value of the building is estimated at £2·25 million. The building was occupied on 5 October 1992.

c. Rotherham—A private developer constructed a building housing three ES Jobcentres to our specification and it was subsequently purchased. The total cost of the project was £2,706,000 wholly funded by the ES. The building was occupied on 26 June 1992.

d. Wakefield—A private developer built the ES Jobcentre to our specification and it was subsequently rented. ES expenditure on fitting out the building was £440,000. The total value of the building is estimated at £2·25 million. The building was occupied on 19 July 1993.

I hope this is helpful.

Unemployment Benefit

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each region were in receipt of unemployment benefit only (a) in total and (b) who had been unemployed for more than six months at the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available, by region, on the numbers of people claiming unemployment benefit only.

The available information relates to the numbers of people claiming all unemployment-related benefits—that is, unemployment benefit, income support and national insurance credits. Unadjusted information by duration for the months of January, April, July and October can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Employment Schemes

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the total money spent, (b) the percentage of that money allocated according to decisions made by Ministers on competitive bids and (c) the percentage of that money allocated according to some statistical measure of need in the last available operational year of (i) Employment Service programme development fund, (ii) education business partnerships, (iii) teacher placement scheme, (iv) compacts, (v) business start-up scheme, (vi) local initiative fund and (vii) TEC Challenge.

Miss Widdecombe: Money spent on these programmes in the last available operational year—1992-93—was:

		£ million
(i)	Programme Development Fund	4·710
(ii)	Education Business Partnerships	1·980
(iii)	Teacher Placement Scheme	3·413
(iv)	Compacts	5·356
(v)	Business Start-up Scheme	62·018
(vi)	Local Initiative Fund	49·700

Expenditure for (i) was for Great Britain; expenditure for (ii) to (iv) was for England. Funding for TEC Challenge was not available in the 1992-93 operational year.

Budgets for the programme development fund were allocated with the regional level of long-term unemployment as a key consideration.

Budgets for TEC challenge were allocated in 1993-94 on the basis of competitive bids.

Budgets for the remaining programmes were allocated on the basis of proposals by training and enterprise councils in their business plans, taking into account commitments arising from previously approved programmes, performance against previous plans, for the business start-up scheme and the local initiative fund, the size of working population in different areas, and for the teacher placement service, the number of teachers.

Productivity Rewards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 433, concerning rewards for productivity, to what extent the statistical series referred to have changed since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The following changes in classification have taken place to the new earnings survey since 1979:

Employees were classified by industry according to the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification, SIC 1980. The 1982 survey was classified by both the SIC, 1968, and SIC, 1980, versions and earlier surveys were classified by SIC, 1968;

1984

Employees were classified as to whether they were paid adult or non-adult rates. In previous surveys employees were classified as being adults if they were males aged 21 or over or females aged 18 or over. The 1983 survey was classified on both bases in 1983.

The occupations of employees were coded using the Standard Occupational Classification, SOC. Previously classification has been to the list of Key Occupations for Statistical Purposes, KOS. The survey was classified on both bases in 1990. Note: employees in the survey are classified as either manual or non-manual by their occupation.

Employees are classified to either the public or private sector in the following way: (a) those reported to be affected by a major collective agreement: to the sector in which the agreement mainly operates; (b) other employees: to the public sector—central Government, local government or public corporations—or to the private sector in accordance with the industrial classification of the firm.

During the period mentioned in the question there were compositional changes to these sectors due to the movement of businesses from the public to the private sector.

There have been no substantive changes in the method of calculating the statistical series referred to, although the output series used in the calculation of productivity in manufacturing have been revised slightly in 1980 and 1992 to reflect revised SIC definitions of manufacturing industry.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of unfilled vacancies in Thorne and Doncaster jobcentres from 8 January.

Miss Widdecombe: In February 1994 the number of unfilled vacancies in Thorne and Doncaster jobcentres were 66 and 426 respectively.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people apply for each vacancy advertised in United Kingdom jobcentres.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available.

Unemployment (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the Doncaster area have been unemployed for more than two years; and what percentage of the unemployed in Doncaster this represents.

Miss Widdecombe: In the Doncaster travel-to-work area the number of people who had been claimant unemployed for over two years in January 1994 was 3,436 or 22·3 per cent. of the total number of unemployed claimants in the area. These figures are on the unadjusted basis.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were placed into employment by jobcentres in the Doncaster area in each month since April 1992; and what percentage of the unemployed in the Doncaster area this represents.

Miss Widdecombe [pursuant to her reply, 17 March 1994]: I regret that due to a printing error, part of my original reply of 17 March 1994, Official Report, column 809, related to census of employment figures rather than the claimant unemployment figures for the Doncaster area. The correct reply follows:

Information on monthly jobcentre placings and monthly claimant unemployment levels can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. However, it is not meaningful to compare flow figures—placings—with stock figures—unemployment levels.

Moreover, jobcentre placements represent only a quarter of all placings made nationally, and this proportion is likely to vary between different regions, different skills and different occupations. Furthermore, within any one area, there is not necessarily a strong match between the skills of the unemployed and the nature of the vacancies available.

During 1993, jobcentres in the Doncaster area placed more than 400 people into employment each month.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the Acts of Parliament and Consolidation Acts that affect local government that have been introduced by his Department since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: One aspect of employment legislation since 1990 has been identified as having an effect on local government.

The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993, sections 45 and 46, amend the Employment and Training Act 1973 on the provision of the Careers Service.

May Day Holiday

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) with what organisation he consulted in his 1993 discussions on the future of the May day holiday;

(2) how may individuals or organisation not otherwise consulted wrote to him on the future of the May day holiday during his 1993 consideration of this issue.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department consulted a wide range of organisations. These included organisations in the manufacturing and service industries, tourism and education sectors.

A total of 1,557 copies of the consultation document were issued, 1,407 to organisations and 150 to individuals. Some 552 organisations and 433 individuals wrote to the Department in response to the consultation.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the staffing costs of his 1993 consultation on the future of the May day holiday.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 433, concerning rewards for productivity, whether he will publish in Economic Trends and its annual supplement figures matching those in table 23 showing as in index the increase in real wages of manual and non-manual workers broken down as between the public sector, private sector services and private sector manufacturing.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Increases in real wages can be calculated by taking the average earnings index and adjusting it to take account of the retail prices index, both of which are published in Economic Trends.

Monthly data on average earnings are not available for manual and non-manual workers in the public sector, private sector services and private sector manufacturing.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Roads

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last discussed with the Republic of Ireland the improvement of the road network within the Republic to facilitate access to the ports of Belfast and Larne in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: There are regular exchanges at official level with the Republic of Ireland about cross-border road issues. There have been no recent discussions at ministerial level.

Transport Links

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last discussed transport links with (a) the Scottish Office and (b) the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement about transport communications from Northern Ireland to both Scotland and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: There are frequent contacts at official level with the Scottish Office and the Republic of Ireland authorities about transport links with Scotland and the Republic of Ireland respectively. The intergovernmental conference last discussed north-south transport issues on 27 April 1992. Transport links with Scotland have not involved recent ministerial contact.

Income Support

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent active involvement of over 12 hours per week during normal working hours in the organisation and running of a political party is taken as sufficient ground for refusing an unemployed claimant income support on the basis that the person is not actively seeking work or available for work.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Wylie to Mr. Ken Maginnis, dated 30 March 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the effect which active involvement in the work of a political party has on an unemployed person's entitlement to Income Support.

Firstly, I should explain that entitlement to Income Support depends on the facts surrounding the individual's circumstances, decisions on which are taken by Adjudication Officers who are independent of the Department of Health and Social Services.

Active involvement of over 12 hours a week in the organisation and running of a political party is not of itself sufficient grounds for refusing benefit. Much would depend on the individual's particular circumstances as to whether he or she fully satisfied the availability and actively seeking work conditions.

I hope this explains the position for you.

Society of Local Authorities

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions, in the past two years, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) has met the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Tim Smith: Once. Following a recent invitation from the chairman of the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives, I met the society for a wide-ranging discussion on local government issues.

GP Fundholders

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many budget-holding practices there are in Northern Ireland; and what percentage this is of the total number of GP practices.

Mr. Ancram: There are 43 GP fundholding groups in Northern Ireland, comprising 61 GP practices. This represents 17 per cent. of the total number of practices.

Company Records

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the company records of SRC Composites Ltd. and Camira Technical Corporation Ltd. are available in Companies House, Belfast.

Mr. Tim Smith: These company records are available at the Registry of Companies, Department of Economic Development, IDB house, 64 Chichester street, Belfast, BT1 4JX.

Emergency Housing

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensures that the Housing Executive continues to make special provision in providing houses in an emergency in Northern Ireland, following consultation on the access to local authority and housing association tenancies paper.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Housing Executive ensure that, in carrying out its responsibilities, priority is given to those in greatest housing need. The consultation paper "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies" describes the Government's proposals for ensuring fairer access to local authority and housing association tenancies in England. The views of interested parties in Northern Ireland are being sought prior to considering whether changes are needed to the arrangements operating in Northern Ireland.

Health Boards (Rationalisation)

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effects on the health care of the population of Northern Ireland of the rationalisation plans introduced by each of the health boards.

Mr. Ancram: I am not aware of the rationalisation plans referred to. Health and social services boards are expected to produce area strategies every three years which set out how they intend to achieve the objectives set in the Government's regional strategy, the current edition of which covers the period 1992 to 1997. As part of the process of implementing the regional strategy, which is designed to improve the health and social well-being of the population of Northern Ireland, boards are required to assess health and social care needs; secure the provision of a range of services; and monitor outcomes. I am glad to say that, as a result, the health care of the people of Northern Ireland continues to improve, with, for example, more people than ever being treated in hospital, fewer people waiting for treatment, infant mortality rates at an all-time low and fewer people dying prematurely from heart disease or strokes.

Rents

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what effect the increase in rents of the Northern Ireland Executive houses has had on the total amount of housing benefit paid to tenants in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Tim Smith: The total amount of housing benefit paid to Housing Executive tenants was £130·8 million in 1991-92, £144·1 million in 1992-93 and is projected to be £156·9 million in 1993-94. The increases in Housing Executive rents in those years were 8 per cent, 9·5 per cent. and 7·75 per cent. respectively. A number of factors affect the total amount of housing benefit paid to Housing Executive tenants and it is not feasible to isolate the impact of rent increases.

Social Security

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his Department's policy in giving social security to those who are suspected of supporting terrorism.

Mr. Ancram: All claims for social security benefits are treated strictly in accordance with the law and awards where there is a valid entitlement.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review social security benefits to Mr. Gerry Adams and Mr. Tom Hartley.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Wylie to Lady Olga Maitland, dated 7 April 1994:

I have been been asked to reply to your recent question on what plans there are to review social security benefits to Mr. Gerry Adams and Mr. Tom Hartley.

I should first explain that information on a person's entitlement to social security benefits, including whether or not they are claiming or getting benefit, is confidential. I am therefore unable to comment on individual cases. However, I can assure you that all claims to benefit are assessed and regularly reviewed by independent adjudication officers, strictly in accordance with social security law and payment is made only where there is a valid entitlement.

I hope this letter sets out the position for you.

Irish-medium Education

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the review into Irish-medium education will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Officials have had a number of discussions with Irish language interests over the last year on all aspects of provision for Irish-medium education. I will be carefully considering the issues raised, with a view to reaching decisions before the end of the present school year.

Rented Accommodation

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of rented accommodation in Northern Ireland is provided by the private sector (a) in urban areas and (b) in rural areas.

Mr. Tim Smith: A total of 3·59 per cent. of total occupied housing stock in Northern Ireland is privately rented. A breakdown of this figure for urban and rural areas is not available.

Hospital Beds

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the number of hospital beds available for use in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Ancram: The average number of available beds in Northern Ireland is shown in the table:

Available beds in wards open overnight	13,488	12,600	11,712
Available beds in dedicated day case wards	88	87	141
Total available beds	13,576	12,687	11,853

Ill Health

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of initiatives taken by his Department to prevent ill health in the communities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The regional strategy for the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland, published in November 1991, emphasises health promotion and disease prevention as the key to health gain. It sets a series of objectives and targets for a number of key areas and risk factors aimed at securing lasting improvements in the health and well-being of the population of Northern Ireland.

Firearm Certificates

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total sum received in Northern Ireland for (a) firearm certificates and (b) shotgun certificates during 1993 or the most recent year for which figures are available.

Sir John Wheeler: In Northern Ireland, the possession of any firearm, including a shotgun, requires a firearm certificate. In 1993, the total sum received for firearm certificates was £1,118,484.

It would not be possible to provide a separate figure for the cost of those firearm certificates relating solely to shotguns without incurring disproportionate cost.

Roads

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last discussed with the Scottish Office the road networks within Scotland leading to the Port of Stranraer and facilitating access to the ports of Belfast and Larne in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: There have over the years been several discussions with the Scottish Office at official level about the road networks in Scotland which provide access to the Scottish ports serving Northern Ireland. There has been no recent discussion at ministerial level.

WALES

Departmental Spending

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate how much his Department spends in each parliamentary constituency in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Expenditure by the Welsh Office is not held on this basis.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations led him to collect centrally information on hospital closures.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend needs to satisfy himself that public consultation on hospital closures takes place in accordance with current guidelines. To monitor this, health authorities in Wales are providing information on planned hospital closures and major service changes. All hospital closures objected to by community health councils are referred to my right hon. Friend for decision.

Planning Policy Guidance

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that PPG 13 applies to Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Planning policy guidance note 13, "Highways Considerations in Development Control", remains extant in Wales. It is under review and my right hon. Friend will be issuing revised guidance for Wales.

Engagements

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many engagements he has fulfilled in Wales since he became Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Since I have been Secretary of State for Wales I have attended 222 events in Wales to date, which include official and political engagements.

Staff Commission

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the establishment of the shadow staff commission for Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The Local Government (Wales) Bill currently before Parliament provides for the creation of a Staff Commission to advise on the steps necessary to safeguard the interests of staff and other personnel implications of local government reorganisation in Wales.

The Staff Commission has been set up in shadow form today. The members are:

Sir Richard Lloyd Jones (Chairman)
Peter Bennett
Michael Roger Towers
Eleri Wynne Jones
Kevin Crowley

The commission will be funded by grant-in-aid payments. Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate for the tourism, roads and transport, housing, other environmental services, including civil defence, arts and libraries and health and personal social services, Wales vote—class XV, vote 5. Pending that approval, expenditure estimated at £150,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

M4 (Congestion)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce traffic management proposals to deal with congestion at the Tredegar Park interchange on the M4.

Sir Wyn Roberts: An improvement scheme, jointly funded with Gwent county council, is programmed to commence in September this year, with completion by February 1995.

Rents

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum of rents referred to the rent registration service for the last year for which figures are available and the total sum of rents determined as reasonable for housing benefit subsidy for the same period.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total sum of rents referred in 1992-93 was £113·8 million. The total sum determined as reasonable for housing benefit subsidy was £98·9 million.

School Closures

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the schools in each education authority which have been considered for closure under the Education Act 1933.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1 January 1994, local education authorities have published proposals under the Education Act 1980 to close the following schools:

Tynyfelin Primary (Clwyd)
Blaenau Primary (Dyfed)
Llanddeusant Primary (Dyfed)
Mynachlogddu Primary (Dyfed)
St. Felix RC Primary (Gwent)
Maendy Primary (South Glamorgan)

Careers Service

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his plans for the implementation of the new arrangements for the delivery of the careers service in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I am publishing today a draft prospectus setting out the suggested approach to be taken in the provision of the careers service in Wales from April 1995. This is to inform those who may wish to provide the service about my intention to invite bids through open competitive tendering.

A formal invitation to interested organisations to submit bids for the provision of the careers service will be issued shortly.

Foresty Commission Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county, hectarage and location the Forestry Commission land sold in Wales since 1 July 1993 where (a) access agreements have been concluded and (b) access agreements have not be concluded, and the price of each piece per hectare.

Mr. Redwood: The areas of forest land in Wales sold by the Forestry Commission since 1 July 1993 are shown in the following table, which also includes those where an access agreement has been concluded. The price paid per hectare is only given where the purchaser has agreed that such information can be made public.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out his target for the sale of Forestry Commission land in Wales in the current year and for the next five years.

Mr. Redwood: As announced in Cm 2514, "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1994-95 to 1996-97 for the Departments of the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Forestry Commission", table 13.12, the commission plans to sell 15,000 hectares of forest land in Britain in each of the next three years. The proportion of this that will be sold in Wales will depend on the state of the market, particularly the demand for forest land in different parts of Britain, but the commission estimates that it will be in the region of 15 per cent. As yet, no firm plans have been made for sales in future years.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what United Kingdom aid policy considerations underlie the changes in allocation of aid to Indonesia over the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The main considerations that have influenced allocations over the past 10 years include Indonesia's effective macroeconomic management and capacity to make good use of development assistance.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of security in Burundi; and how it is affecting the delivery of aid by British relief organisations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There have been outbreaks of fighting in and around Bujumbura. However, we understand that aid operations are continuing with relative freedom.

Uganda

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Treasury about the development implications of the continuing debt crisis in Uganda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: By long-standing convention, discussions of this nature between Departments are confidential.

Iraq

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the amount spent on aid to Iraq (a) directly and (b) through international agencies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following is the information:

United Kingdom bilateral and multilateral official development assistance to Iraqis 1984-93

	Multilateral agencies[1] £ million	Iraqi people[2] £ million
1984	0·04	—

1990	0·13	—
1991	4·80	30·35
1993	N/A	5·24

[1] Estimates of United Kingdom share of official development assistance channelled through multilateral agencies. Such estimates are not yet available for 1992 and 1993.

[2] There is no bilateral official development assistance to the Government of Iraq. The amounts recorded as flows to Iraq are humanitarian assistance provided through United Nations agencies and NGOs to Iraqi citizens.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the project to develop a sustainable environment and development strategy for the island of St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1993 a team comprising representatives from the royal botanic gardens, Kew and the International Institute for Environment and Development was contracted by the Overseas Development Administration to visit St. Helena with the objective of identifying and developing an environmental strategy for the island.

Following the visit the consultants produced a report entitled "The St. Helena Sustainable Environmental and Development Strategy and Action Plan". The Government of St. Helena have been giving detailed consideration to the report's recommendations, and are expected to respond in the near future.

Aid and Trade

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 24 February, Official Report, column 390, if he will list the total aid received by each country on a per capita basis.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is contained in table E1 of the Overseas Development Administration's British Aid Statistics 1988-89 to 1992-93. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Banana Producers

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what is his policy in respect of the EC providing a special package of aid to Latin American banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has agreed to support some assistance to Latin American producers for diversification and development.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what discussions he has had with Directorate-General VIII about the possibility of the EC providing a special package of aid to Latin American banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have had discussions with Commission staff about how the Community should respond to the needs of all banana producers.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what representation he has received from other EC member states on the possibility of the EC providing a special package of aid to Latin American banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, if he will outline the amendments suggested by the United Kingdom to the EC proposal for aid to traditional African, Caribbean and Pacific banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The amendments suggested by the United Kingdom will ensure funds are used to help sustain the economic viability of the industry and to promote restructuring.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what discussions he has had with Directorate-General VIII on the amendments suggested by the United Kingdom to the EC proposal for aid to traditional African, Caribbean and Pacific banana-producing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The amendments suggested by the United Kingdom are under discussion with Commission staff.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what discussions he has had with (a) the Prime Ministers of the Windward Islands Governments, (b) the Windward Islands Banana Growers Association and (c) the four individual banana growers' associations of the Windward Islands on the amendments made by the United Kingdom to the EC proposal for aid to traditional African, Caribbean and Pacific banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey has had several discussions about the EC proposal and the proposed United Kingdom amendments to it with the Prime Minister of Dominica, who was speaking on behalf of the Windward Island Governments. Our development division in the Caribbean is in close contact with WINBAN and the Banana Growers' Associations. Indeed, the amendments we have proposed are based on such discussions.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what discussions he has had with other EC member states on the amendments suggested by the United Kingdom to the EC proposal for aid to traditional African, Caribbean and Pacific banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: If the Commission agrees to incorporate the United Kingdom amendments, the revised proposal will be discussed by all member states in a working group of the EC council of Ministers.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 248, what discussions he has had with the Commission about the likely date on which the EC aid package will be available to traditional African, Caribbean and Pacific banana-producing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ACP will be able to claim compensation for losses in the second half of 1993 as soon as the package is approved by the Council of Ministers.

Aid (Military Sales)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to introduce legislation amending the Overseas Development and Co-operation Act 1980 to make explicitly illegal any direct or indirect linking of aid to sales of military equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development and Co-operation Act 1980 sets out the legal basis for the aid programme. It does not cover any specific areas of aid policy. We do not see any need to amend the Act to cover arms sales links. It is the Government's clear policy not to link the aid programme to arms sales.

HEALTH

Hospital and Community Health Services

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the per capita allocation to hospital and community health services to inner London health authorities for 1993-94; and what are the equivalent figures for (a) Birmingham, (b) Newcastle, (c) Manchester, (d) Liverpool and (e) Leeds.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of regional health authorities to allocate resources to districts and information held on the total resources allocated to district health authorities in 1993-94 is not available centrally.

Expenditure Statistics

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is spent per capita in health services for residents in (a) London, (b) Birmingham, (c) Manchester,

(d) Liverpool, (e) Leeds, (f) Newcastle and (g) in England as a whole; and what proportion is spent on treatment (i) in hospital and (ii) by community services, excluding the element of cost which is attributable to medical education and research.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table gives per capita spend for 1992-93, the latest year for which expenditure data are available. The figures include non-cash-limited family health services expenditure in addition to expenditure on cash-limited hospital and community health services. Expenditure by district health authorities as purchasers of hospital and community health services is not separately identifiable in the information collected by the Department.

The figures will include some element of expenditure on research and medical education.

	District health authorities spend per capita £	Family health services authorities spend per capita £	Total spend per capita £
London	460	124	584
Birmingham	417	132	549
Manchester	654	137	791
Liverpool	487	142	629
Leeds	381	140	521
Newcastle	514	135	649
Total England	378	132	510

1. There is additional hospital and community health services expenditure from national and regional top-sliced budgets.

Family Health Services Authorities

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 3 March, Official Report, column 851, what was the percentage increase of the (a) FHSA administration costs and (b) FHSA medicine costs in each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The percentage increases in family health services authorities' administration expenditure for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 over the previous year were 25·2, 30·8 and 19·1 respectively. The percentage increases in family health services drugs expenditure for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 over the previous year were 7·1, 11·4 and 14 respectively.

FHSAs manage the introduction of general practitioner fundholding, the monitoring of general practitioner prescribing, and the development of clinical audit in primary care—all initiatives to improve the effectiveness of patient care and value for money. In 1992-93 administration expenditure represented only 2·5 per cent. of the £6·5 billion of taxpayers' money spent on the FHS.

Internal Market

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the principles driving the internal market; and what plans she has to regulate it.

Dr. Mawhinney: The internal market enables district health authorities and general practioner fundholders to assess their patient's needs and purchase services more responsively. This means that money for services follows patient care to those hospitals and community units which provide high quality and cost effective care. Hospitals and community units therefore have an incentive to develop their services in an environment which encourages increasing efficiency through competition. We already have mechanisms in place to manage the market and these are constantly updated.

NHS Budget

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the management overhead as a percentage of the total budget of the national health service in each year since 1990-91.

Dr. Mawhinney: The gross salary costs of general and senior managers as a percentage of the total hospital and community health services revenue expenditure in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 was 1·7, 1·9 and 2·4 respectively. The figures need to be treated with caution. The number of managers has been deliberately increased since the mid 1980s—not just since the reforms—because the service was previously undermanaged. Much of the increase arises from the reclassification of existing staff, including many senior nurses, as managers. General and senior managers account for only 2 per cent. of the total national health service work force in England.

NHS Trusts

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria she applies when considering proposals for mergers of NHS trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: The same criteria area used to assess all applications for national health service trust status, including proposals for trust mergers. They are that the establishment of the trust will give clear benefits and improved quality of service to patients; that management has the necessary skills and capacity to operate independently; that senior professional staff, especially consultants, are involved in the management of the unit and that the trust will be financially viable.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the chief executives of the fourth wave of NHS trusts will receive remuneration of £80,000 per year or above; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about the individual remuneration of trust chief executives is not held centrally. The remuneration of trust chief executives is a matter for trust boards but information about their emoluments is published in annual accounts and annual reports available locally.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mergers of hospital trusts have taken place in London and in England since 1990; and how many hospital beds have closed as a result.

Dr. Mawhinney: There have been three mergers of national health service trusts since 1990. Information on bed closures is not available centrally.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many shop fronts advertising tobacco products are currently covered by the voluntary agreement with the tobacco manufacturing companies; and how many she estimates are within (a) three miles, (b) two miles, (c) one mile, (d) three-quarters of a mile, (e) half a mile and (f) one-quarter of a mile of school premises.

Dr. Mawhinney: All cigarette and hand-rolling tobacco brand advertising material displayed on shop fronts is covered by the voluntary agreement, in that the advertising should comply with the cigarette code of the British code of advertising practice. In addition, all such material of 40 sq in or more must carry a health warning. Under the voluntary agreement the total number of external permanent cigarette and hand-rolling tobacco advertisements at retail premises is being reduced by 50 per cent. over five years from July 1991. Priority is being given to reducing the number of signs on shops clearly visible from school. Information on the number of shop fronts advertising tobacco products within different distances of school premises is not held centrally.

Surplus Property

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 594, when she last had occasion to comment adversely on the time taken to dispose of surplus national health service property.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities have been very successful in disposing of surplus national health service property. In the past 10 years, over £1 billion has been raised which has been reinvested in patient care.

Some properties do prove to be hard to sell given the difficult property market of recent years. I see no reason to comment adversely on the regional health authorities' performance in this area.

Mental Health

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will implement the 10-point plan for supervised discharge of mental health patients set out in the report of the mental health nursing review team.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced our 10-point plan to reinforce community care for mentally ill people on 12 August 1993, following the Department's internal review of legal powers in this area.

We have made substantial progress on the matters covered by the plan. Following wide consultation we shall be introducing legislation as soon as possible to give effect to the review team's proposals for a new power of supervised discharge and for extending the present Mental Health Act provision for leave of absence.

The revised Mental Health Act code of practice was published at the end of August.

Draft guidance on the discharge of psychiatric patients from hospitals, and their continuing care in the community, was issued for consultation on 12 January. We are now considering more than 250 comments received on the draft and will be issuing the definitive guidance shortly.

Guidance on the development of supervision registers for the most vulnerable patients was issued in February and health authorities were required to introduce these registers from 1 April.

As part of our programme to improve training for key workers with mentally ill people, we held a successful conference in London on 3 March, at which I gave the keynote address.

The clinical standards advisory group is on schedule with its review of standards of care for people with schizophrenia, on which it expects to report to Ministers in December.

The mental health task force has been reinforced to carry out a special review of mental health services in the London implementation zone. This work is being jointly led by the head of the task force, Mr. David King, and Dr. Peter Kennedy who has been seconded from his post as chief executive of the York health services trust. The team will be working with district health authorities and other agencies to develop short and long-term action plans, and will be reporting to Ministers on progress against the plans and any issues requiring action in the longer term.

We attach a very high priority to services for mentally ill people and will maintain the vigorous action we have been taking in these and other areas to develop and improve them still further.

Community Care

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice her Department has given to local authorities and health authorities on consultation with users and carers in producing local purchasing plans for community care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchcliffe) on 9 March, Official Report, column 307.

Mentally Ill People (Homicide)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the first report of the confidential inquiry into homicides by mentally ill people is expected to be available.

Mr. Bowis: We expect to receive the first report later this year.

Chinese Swabs

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received about Chinese swabs;

(2) what advice her Department is giving to national health service supplies authorities on the purchasing of Chinese swabs.

Mr. Sackville: Two representations have been received. A defective product was withdrawn from use last year and the contract in question was terminated.

No advice has been given on the purchase of divisions swabs from particular sources. The various purchasing of the National Health Service Supplies Authority are aware of the standards to be applied when purchasing surgical dressings, and that sterile dressings should be purchased from suppliers who operate recognised quality assurance systems.

Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has given to the request from the Royal Victoria infirmary trust in Newcastle for extra paediatric intensive care provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Royal Victoria infirmary and associated hospitals national health service trust has made no request for additional resources for paediatric intensive care provision. The National Health Service Management Executive has asked all regional general managers and district general managers to ensure that levels of paediatric intensive care provision adequately meet the needs of the local population.

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the contracts currently being worked on for her Department by Coopers and Lybrand, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse, KPMG Peat Marwick, Grant Thornton, Robson Rhodes, Levy Gee, Hacker Young, BDO Binder Hamlyn, Pannell Kerr Forster and Stoy Hayward.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is as shown.

Michael Buchanan

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 727, if she will increase the membership of the inquiry panel set up by the North West London mental health trust to investigate the care and treatment of Michael Buchanan, convicted of manslaughter after discharge from Shenley psychiatric hospital, to include two members of the public to ensure that it is as independent and objective as possible, as recommended in the Ritchie report.

Mr. Bowis: The panel of inquiry set up by the North West London mental health trust is an independent inquiry and not an internal one of the type referred to in the Ritchie report.

St. Mary's Hospital

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will hold an investigation into the use by Neil Goodwin, chief executive of the St. Mary's hospital trust, of a private room in his hospital; what arrangements were made for payments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No. Mr. Goodwin was treated as a private patient at his own expense.

Psychiatric Wards, London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the need to increase the number of beds on psychiatric wards in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has received a number of representations about mental health services including the number of beds provided on psychiatric wards in London.

IT Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information technology consultants her Department has employed, for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The total expenditure on information technology consultants by the Department for each year since 1990-91, the earliest year for which figures are available was:

	£ million
1990-91	10·19
1991-92	12·50
1992-93	13·37
1993-94	12·55

The services covered by this expenditure included advice on procurement and information strategies, the design, development and implementation of the office automation system and user support services. A very wide range of firms is used for this purpose.

Pharmaceutical Investment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the initial stage of the strategy to encourage inward pharmaceutical direct investment from the United States and Japan is expected to be completed; and what input has been given from the Board of Trade.

Dr. Mawhinney: The initial stage of the inward investment strategy is expected to be completed in a few weeks. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Invest in Britain Bureau are represented on the working group set up to develop the strategy.

Anthrax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision she has made for the treatment of, or vaccination against, penicillin-resistant anthrax.

Mr. Sackville: Anthrax vaccine creates protective immunity to the toxin produced by the anthrax bacillus. The vaccine is, therefore, effective against all strains of anthrax, irrespective of their antibiotic sensitivity.

The anthrax bacillus is sensitive to a number of common antibiotics and these would be available for treatment in the rare event of penicillin-resistant strains.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the extent to which naturally occurring strains of anthrax are resistant to penicillin; and if she will make a statement on penicillin-resistant anthrax.

Mr. Sackville: Only three cases of penicillin-resistant anthrax have been described in the world literature. One of these occurred in 1974 in the United Kingdom and this was verified at the Public Health Laboratory Service's centre for applied microbiology and research. The other two reports were from Bosnia and Japan, but it has been impossible to verify these. With these exceptions, natural strains of anthrax are not resistant to penicillin.

Medical Certificates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances general practitioners can charge a fee for issuing a medical certificate to a patient.

Dr. Mawhinney: Under paragraph 37 of their terms of service, general practitioners are required to issue a defined list of medical certificates free of charge. They may charge a fee for issuing certificates not included on this list.

Dental Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines there are to regulate the use of premises, equipment and staff, paid for from public funds, for the development of private dental practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fees paid to general dental practitioners do not fund the development of private practice. Fees are set to take account of the average level of expenses incurred in the provision of national health service treatment.

Wythenshawe Hospital

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department has had with the Manchester Health Purchasing Consortium about the major improvements planned for Wythenshawe hospital; for what reason a new and more limited scheme will now have to be submitted to her Department; what effect an amended scheme will have on the running down of Withington hospital; what other hospitals in the city will be affected; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: When considering major capital proposals we need to be satisfied that schemes are cost effective and offer the best value for money. Officials support Ministers in this by meeting national health service staff and discussing new schemes in detail. The Wythenshawe hospital development is subject to this process. Further improvements to the scheme will deliver better services for less cost. It is too soon to detail the impact that the current revision will have upon the scheme or on other hospitals in the city, including Withington hospital.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received alleging difficulties in recruiting hospital consultants in (a) anaesthetics, (b) accident and emergency, (c) ophthalmology, (d) paediatrics and (e) other specialties.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health has received representations regarding recruitment of hospital consultants in anaesthetics and paediatrics. No specific concerns have been raised relating to recruitment in the accident and emergency area.

In ophthalmology there are a number of senior registrars available to take up consultant appointments, but who, for personal reasons, are not submitting applications for posts.

In paediatrics, concern regarding shortages of suitably qualified doctors available to take up consultant appointments is known to the Department. The British Paediatric Association has met separately with the then chief executive of the national health service management executive and me to express their concerns. Steps are being taken to alleviate these problems. Regions have indicated to the Department that they expect to fund the additional senior registrar posts they were allocated by the Joint Planning Advisory Committee after the 1992 review within the required time scale of March 1995 at the latest. The increased throughput of higher specialist trainees following the implementation of the Report of the Working Group on Specialist Medical Training, "Hospital Doctors: Training for the Future" should also be of assistance in making suitable candidates available to take up consultant appointments.

In anaesthetics, a similar situation exists. The Department is fully aware of the Royal College of Anaesthetists' concerns over the availability of suitably trained candidates for consultant posts. Again, positive steps have been taken by the NHS executive to respond to these issues, including the introduction of innovative mechanisms to increase the number of doctors in training in the specialty. As with paediatrics, regions have indicated that they expect to be able to establish all senior registrar posts allocated to them within the required time scale, in this case of March 1996.

Employing bodies may experience difficulties in recruiting consultants for a range of reasons. These include the nature of the post, its geographical location and the facilities offered at the hospital concerned.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is being made to ensure adequate provision of long-term beds in the NHS following the recent decision of the health service ombudsman; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The recommendations on the specific care instigated by the Commissioner have been accepted by the Leeds health authority. We are considering whether there are any wider implications to the Health Service Commissioner's report.

Recruitment Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS has spent on employing recruitment consultants in the last year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for recruitment of staff, and the procedures they use for doing so, are a matter for national health service employers.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department has spent on recruitment consultant purposes in the last year.

Mr. Sackville: During 1993-94 the Department of Health, excluding its agencies, spent £259,659 on recruitment, of which £204,606 was spent on work carried out by Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency, an executive agency of the Cabinet Office.

Home Helps

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many home helps were employed by each local authority responsible for community care; and what was the ratio of home helps to population in each authority, at 30 September 1993.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 15 July 1993, Official Report, columns 624-26 for data in respect of the position at 30 September 1992. Information about the position at 30 September 1993 should be available shortly.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what computer systems her Department have brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has a large number of computer systems mainly for office support and statistics. It would not be possible fully to list these without incurring disproportionate costs.

NHS Management Executive

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the costs associated with redesignating the NHS management executive as the NHS executive.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 31 March, Official Report, columns 1049-50.

NHS Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings she has held with, and what representations she has received from, the Institute for Economic Affairs, Centre for Policy Studies, Adam Smith Institute and Institute of Directors regarding reform of the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since late 1992, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has met only once with the Institute of Directors and once with the Institute of Economic Affairs. I am not aware, since then, of any written representations which have been received from these organisations on the subject of National Health Service reform.

Surgical Operations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports have been made to her of instances in which surgical operations have been conducted without an anaesthetic in NHS hospitals because of lack of supplies.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Care Orders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 687, where those children aged 16 or 17 years subject to care orders, were discharged to other than those placed with foster parents or become residents in community homes.

Mr. Bowis: The latest centrally available information relates to the position at 31 March 1992, when of the estimated 6,900 children aged 16 or 17 subject to care orders, 2,900 were in placements other than with foster parents or in community homes. Details of these are shown in the table.

Number of children looked after by local authorities under care orders aged 16 or 17 years by placement at 31 March 1992, England, excluding children in foster placements and community homes

	Number
England—Estimated Total	2,900
In lodgings, living independently of residential employment	1,100
Placed for adoption	30
Placement with parents regulations	1,100
In private registered homes	50
In schools for children with special needs, residential care and other schools and homes	130
In voluntary homes and hostels	170
Remaining placements[1]	390

[1]Remaining placements include: youth treatment centres, mother and baby homes, national health service or other establishments providing medical and/or nursing care, young offender institution or prison establishment, children absent from agreed placement, and placements not specifically categorised.

Figures are rounded to the nearest 100 for estimates of a thousand or more and to the nearest 10 otherwise.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 537, what was the average, maximum and minimum overspend by the 49 fundholders in 1991-92; and when she expects figures for 1992-93 to be available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Out of the 49 fundholders who overspent in 1991-92, the average overspend was £51,481. The maximum overspend was £158,988 and the minimum £1,236. We are not yet able to say when final audited information for 1992-93 will be available.

Unwanted Pregnancies

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward proposals to help reduce unwanted pregnancies.

Mr. Sackville: The Government have for some years been actively promoting initiatives to enable people to plan and space their families as they wish and avoid unwanted pregnancies. This activity has received renewed impetus with the publication of the "The Health of the Nation" White Paper which sets challenging targets, in particular to reduce unwanted conceptions amongst under 16s. I am today writing to the hon. Member with further details. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

"Your Pocket Guide to Sex"

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of (a) commissioning, (b) printing, (c) distributing, (d) promoting and (e) recalling "Your Pocket Guide to Sex", written by Nick Fisher for the Health Education Authority, which was withdrawn on 23 March.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 March 1994]: The Health Education Authority estimate the total cost of withdrawing "Your Pocket Guide to Sex" as £17,000. This should be seen in the context of estimated publication income generated by the HEA in 1993-94 of £700,000.

TRANSPORT

New Roads

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new road schemes have attracted more than 17,500 representations in the past five years in England and Wales.

Mr. Key: Two.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 10 new road schemes which have attracted the most representations in the past five years.

Mr. Key: The 10 new road schemes which have attracted the greatest number of representations arising out of public consultation over the last five years are as follows:

Scheme	Number of representations
1. M1-M62 link road[1]	26,700
2. M62 relief road	18,000
3. M25 junctions 12-15 link roads	11,800
4. A453 Clifton lane	7,200
5. Greater Manchester western and northern relief road (M56-M62)[1]	6,300
6. Western orbital route/Kidderminster, Blakedown and Hagley bypass[2]	6,000
7. A3 Hindhead improvement	5,000
8. A418 west of Aylesbury to Wing	5,000
9. A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement	4,300
10. Gateshead western bypass	3,900

Included in the totals given are the numbers of signatures to petitions as well as those returning departmental questionnaires or other forms of pre-printed reply.

[1] Schemes have been withdrawn from the road programme.

[2] Schemes separated in May 1991.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets he has set for the Driving Standards Agency for 1994-95.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has set the following key targets for the Driving Standards Agency, which are contained in the agency's business Plan, a copy of which will be placed in the Library: to achieve, or better, unit costs of £24·50 for car tests; £59·03 for bus, coach and lorry tests; £32·66 for motorcycle tests; and £38·62 for overall approved driving instructor register activities; to recover full costs through fees and charges, including the recovery of accumulated deficits by 1995-96; to achieve a national average waiting time of no more than six weeks for car tests and no more than four weeks for motorcycle, bus, coach and lorry test; and to answer 90 per cent. of telephone calls to booking offices within one minute.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Institute of Professional Driving Examiners is a recognised trade union in the Driving Standards Agency for the purposes of negotiation or consultation.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. John Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 30 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked to reply to your question about recognition of the Institute of Professional Driving Examiners (IPDE) by this Agency.

IPDE has been recognised as a trade union in the Driving Standards Agency only for the purposes of consultation. I have no plans at present to recognise IPDE for negotiation purposes.

British Rail (Coal Tonnage)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was (a) the national figure and (b) the regional figures for the total coal tonnage carried by British Rail in 1993.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent national data can be found in table 1.12 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1993," a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Regional figures are not available.

Roads (Worcestershire)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect his review of the trunk roads programme in England will have on the availability of transport supplementary grant for the Worcester western orbital road and the Wyre Piddle by-pass.

Mr. Key: None. As my right hon. Friend made clear in answering a question following his statement in the House on 30 March on the trunk road programme review, the review does not affect local authority roads.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many health and safety inspectors were employed to cover each section of the transport industry in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. MacGregor: The definition and responsibilities of health and safety inspectors varies greatly from sector to sector of the transport industry. Details are as follows:

Rail: HM Railway Inspectorate employed 21 inspectors in 1978 and 30 in 1992.

Aviation: Responsibility for safety inspections rest with the Safety Regulation Group of the Civil Aviation Authority which employed 777 people in 1992-93, not all of whom work as safety inspectors. Figures for 1978-79 are not available due to organisational changes.

Shipping: The Surveyor General Organisation of the Department of Transport employed 186 marine surveyors involved safety inspection work in 1992-93. Comparable figures for 1978-79 are not available.

Road transport: The Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency employs 925 staff in vehicle inspection and enforcement work. Figures for 1978-79 are not available.

Roundabouts (Safety)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been conducted on the correlation between the diameter of roundabouts and the occurrence of vehicular accidents around them.

Mr. Key: An investigation into accidents at roundabouts, and which addressed the effects of roundabout diameters, has been undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory and is reported in TRRL Laboratory report 1120. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Running Costs Review

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of running costs within his Department; and if he will make it his policy to inform the appropriate trade union as soon as surplus posts are identified.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department or its agency will enter into consultation with the trade unions if a surplus staffing situation occurs which might result in the declaration of redundancies.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each meeting held by central Department of Transport management, since the announcement of the running costs review in his Department, to discuss this matter; and who was the senior manager present at each of these meetings.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand that running costs are discussed at many meetings of management within the Department. It is not normal practice to provide information of the sort which the hon. Lady requests about the internal management of a Government Department.

Channel Tunnel Freight Lines

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that sound-proofing insulation is installed along the two south London rail lines to be used by channel tunnel freight traffic to protect local residents from increased noise levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Steps being taken by British Rail (Railfreight Distribution) to reduce the effect of the international rail freight traffic include the introduction of new locomotives and rolling stock and continuously welded rail. In addition, BR (RfD) has agreed jointly funded schemes with local authorities, including the London borough of Bromley, for the provision of acoustic barriers alongside existing tracks expected to be most affected at night. BR (RfD) is willing to hold talks on a corresponding basis with any other local authority whose area is likely to be similarly affected.

I have recently agreed to provide supplementary credit approval for £0·336 million to Bromley in this context. I and my colleagues will be prepared to consider TPP—transport policies and plans—applications for resources in 1995-96 from other authorities in London which agree schemes with BR (RfD). Such applications will be considered on their merits and in the light of the resources available.

Staff Redundancies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will define (a) skills and (b) individual ability as used in his Department's "Establishment News", ENT 2/94; and how the criteria will be used to select staff for compulsory redundancy.

Mr. Norris: The Department's "Establishment News", ENT 2/94, set out the principles and procedures the Department or its agencies would follow in dealing with potential redundancy situations. The actual criteria adopted to deal with each situation and the way in which they would be used will be decided following consultation with the trade unions at the time.

Staff, Newcastle

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the offices of his Department in the Newcastle upon Tyne travel-to-work area; and how many posts at each are covered by (a) casual, (b) agency or (c) fixed-term appointment staff.

Mr. Norris: The Department and its agencies have 30 offices of varying size in the Newcastle-upon-Tyne travel-to-work area. At present, a total of 27 casual staff are employed at six of these offices, and one person is employed on a fixed-term appointment. Details are as follows.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold open all vacant posts currently covered by casual staff in the Newcastle vehicle registration office in order that staff declared surplus in the Driving Standards Agency can be redeployed.

Mr. Norris: It is the Department's practice to manage staffing so as to allow where possible for the redeployment into other posts of suitable staff who become surplus from their existing work. Firm plans for the posts referred to will not be possible until the current review of the vehicle registration office network, and market testing of work in the Driving Standards Agency, are complete.

Permanent Secretary

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the objectives set by his Department for the Permanent Secretary for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Norris: The permanent secretary supports my right hon. Friend in securing the aims and objectives set out in the Department's annual report.

Child Care Schemes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the child care schemes operated by his Department and agencies and the number of places available on each scheme.

Mr. Norris: Child care schemes operated in the Department of Transport and its agencies are listed in the table:

Location	Child care scheme	Number of places
Swansea	DVLA Nursery	60
Swansea	DVLA Holiday Playscheme	70
Crowthorne	TRL Summer Holiday Playscheme	24

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the child care schemes with which his Department has an involvement excluding those run solely by the Department of Transport and the number of places offered on each scheme.

Mr. Norris: Child care schemes in which the Department of Transport has involvement are listed in the table:

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what authority the DVLA passes information about drivers to commercial organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No information from the DVLA driver record is disclosed to any commercial organisation other than with the express consent of the driver concerned.

Railway Stations (Safety)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Railtrack will spend in its first year of operation on measures to improve passenger safety at United Kingdom rail stations; how much it will spend at stations in south London; and how much British Rail spent on passenger safety improvements at stations in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure on safety is no longer recorded separately because it is impossible to identify precisely what proportion of expenditure on infrastructure and other improvements is related to safety as opposed to such things as quality of service or efficiency.

Roads Expenditure, West Midlands

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the total expenditure in 1992-93 prices for all expenditure involved on new road construction and maintenance on all roads in the west midlands in each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The figures include expenditure on both new construction and maintenance on all roads—motorways, trunk roads and local authority roads. Some estimation has been involved, particularly for 1992-93 where not all figures are yet available.

Redundancies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made in the next financial year's budget for his Department or agencies to run an early retirement/redundancy scheme.

Mr. Norris: The position remains as in the reply on severance payments which I gave the hon. Lady on 24 March.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Driving Standards Agency management will consult the Institute of Professional Driving Examiners in line with the departmental redundancy arrangements in the event of any IPDE members becoming surplus.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. John Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 30 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about consultation with the Institute of Professional Driving Examiners (IPDE) in the event of any of their members becoming surplus.

In accordance with the departmental redundancy arrangements the Agency will consult with IPDE, and any other Trade Union representing the staff involved, in the event of staff in the Agency becoming surplus.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the relevant trades unions will be consulted at the earliest opportunity if staff within his Department are going to be made surplus.

Mr. Norris: The Department or its agency will, in seeking to address any surplus staffing situation which might result in the declaration of redundancies, consult the trades unions representing the staff concerned at the earliest opportunity.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider, when faced with a surplus staff situation or redundancies, redeploying staff elsewhere in the Department even if that means transferring staff from one agency to another.

Mr. Norris: The Department or its agency will consider the transfer of staff to other areas of work in the event of a surplus staffing or redundancy situation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any of his staff are likely to become surplus as a result of the forthcoming move of the traffic area office in Edinburgh.

Mr. Key: As a result of the move of the Edinburgh traffic area office, two members of staff will become surplus to the traffic area office requirements. The traffic area office is working with the regional personnel unit to find alternative posts.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what access his Department has to European Union funds to retrain staff who are liable to be made redundant or who are made redundant.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the European Union funds in question—the European social fund—may be used only for those who are already unemployed. The Employment Department administers the European social fund in Great Britain. Any retraining of staff still employed by the Department would therefore not be eligible for such funds.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the practice of his Department when faced with a potential need to declare redundancies of the type requiring consultation between his Department, and its agencies, and the recognised trade unions, regarding the seeking of agreement about the means of (a) avoiding redundancies, (b) reducing the numbers of redundancies or (c) mitigating the consequences of redundancies.

Mr. Norris: In seeking to address any surplus staffing situation which might result in the declaration of redundancies, the Department or its agency will at the earliest opportunity consult the trade unions representing the staff involved. Such consultation will be with a view to considering the ways and means of avoiding compulsory redundancies and with a view to meeting management needs and ending staff uncertainty as quickly as possible.

Highways Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the objectives set by his Department for the newly appointed chief executive of the Highways Agency for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Key: The Secretary of State has set the following objectives for the chief executive of the Highways Agency which are published in the Highways Agency framework document:

- to provide the best possible service both to road users and those affected by roads;
- to manage the new construction and maintenance programmes to secure the best value for money within the Government's overall strategy for trunk roads;
- to contribute to the Secretary of State's target of reducing road casualties by one third by the year 2000 compared with the annual average from 1981 to 1985;
- to give full weight to both the environmental and economic costs and benefits associated with the use, construction and maintenance of trunk roads and to strike a balance accordingly;
- to improve the efficiency of the Agency year on year.

The chief executive has been set a number of key tasks and targets for the financial year 1994-95 which underpin these objectives. The key tasks and targets are published in the agency's 1994-95 business plan, a copy of which has been placed in the House Library.

Taxi Drivers (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 21 February regarding Nottingham taxi drivers.

Mr. Norris: My reply to the hon. Member was sent on 7 March 1994. With receipt of the hon. Member's letter of 22 March, it became clear that he had not received my letter and my private secretary thereupon faxed him a copy of it.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the public inquiry on the Birmingham northern relief road will commence; how long it is expected to take; if he will set out the terms of reference for the public inquiry with particular reference to whether it is open to the public inquiry to reject the possibility of building the road; and if the terms of reference will be restricted to the line of the road.

Mr. Key: The inquiry will commence on 21 June. It will consider all the draft schemes and orders which have been published. If made, these would establish the route of BNRR, junction and side road arrangements, the compulsory purchase of the land needed for the scheme and ancillary features and the right to levy tolls. The inquiry could last several months.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the tolling design of the Birmingham northern relief road is consistent with the recommendations of his Department's Green Paper on motorway charging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Green Paper, "Paying For Better Motorways" suggested that while conventional tolling, with toll booths and barriers, had several advantages it would be impracticable to toll the entire motorway network by conventional methods. This is because existing motorways were not designed for tolling and land was therefore not set aside for the purpose; and because conventional tolling over the whole network would cause unacceptable traffic delays. These arguments do not apply to individual stretches of road, such as the Birmingham northern relief road, where provision for tolling is part of the design.

Shipping Subsidies

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he is making to the French Government and the European Commission about the plans developed by the French Government to subsidise the state-owned shipping company Compagnie Generale Maritime.

Mr. Norris: The EC Commission has responsibility for initial consideration of these matters. My Department has made clear that we consider that a number of subsidies to shipping companies in the Community may represent illegal state aids within the terms of the treaty of Rome. We understand that the Commission is investigating whether subsidies paid by the French Government to Compagnie Generale Maritime, or proposed to be paid in the future, contravene the treaty.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the subsidy and tax concessions made available by member states of the European Union to their domestic shipping companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We believe that some subsidies and tax concessions made available by member states to their domestic shipping industries may constitute illegal state aid within the terms of the treaty of Rome. We have presented detailed information to the EC Commission which has responsibility for the initial consideration of these matters, and we understand that it is currently investigating certain cases.

Mersey Rail (Signalling)

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Southport and Merseyside relating to safety with the new signalling system on Mersey Rail; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which the travelling public are protected as a result of this new investment.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of any representations from Southport and Merseyside. Her Majesty's chief inspecting officer of railways has received representations from the general secretary of ASLEF.

The safety assessment by the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate of phase 1 of the new Mersey Rail signalling scheme is almost complete. Her Majesty's railway inspectorate has raised a number of questions with Railtrack. It is anticipated that approval of the works will be granted by the Health and Safety Executive on behalf of the Secretary of State following a satisfactory response to the points raised and a site inspection.

Vehicles (Blacked-out Windows)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) from what organisations he has received representations about vehicles with blacked-out windows;

(2) what is his assessment of the effectiveness of regulation 32 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986;

(3) how many prosecutions have been made under regulation 32 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 in each of the past five years.

Mr. Key: We have received 15 representations about blacked-out windows from members of the public during the last three years.

Regulation 32 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 makes the fitment of excessively dark glass illegal. The British and European standards to which this regulation refers requires not less than 70 per cent. light transmission through all window glass. We believe that all vehicle manufacturers comply with this regulation.

Details of prosecutions for obscuration of windows are not available because prosecutions for all construction and use offences are recorded jointly. We understand that the police would be more likely to bring prosecutions under regulation 30 which relates to the driver's view of the road being unobscured. Some police forces have ordered darkened windows to be cleaned, or dark plastic film to be removed, under their vehicle rectification schemes.

Traffic Warden Duties

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which local authorities have taken over traffic warden duties;

(2) what plans he has to transfer traffic warden duties to local authority responsibility.

Mr. Key: Under the Road Traffic Act 1991, local authorities can apply to the Secretary of State for Transport for designation orders enabling them to use parking attendants to enforce most parking offences in their areas. At present, these offences are enforced by traffic wardens and the police.

Nine London boroughs—Wandsworth, Bromley, Hammersmith and Fulham, Lewisham, Camden, Hackney, Hounslow, Richmond and Southwark—are currently using parking attendants to enforce most parking offences in their areas. It is the Government's intention that all the London boroughs will be enforcing permitted parking by July this year; by that date, it is expected that the majority of the boroughs will also be enforcing most restricted parking. Enforcement on the red routes in London is to remain with the police and their traffic wardens.

The Government are currently preparing guidance for the local authorities outside London which would like to enforce parking offences in their areas. Once the guidance has been published, local authorities outside London will be able to apply to the Secretary of State for designation orders giving them the necessary powers.

Road Tax Offences

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the number of road tax offences reported by police to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Swansea in the past year; how many were brought to prosecution; and what was done with those cases not prosecuted.

Mr. Key [holding answer 28 March 1994]: The number of vehicles reported to the DVLA by the police for alleged vehicle excise duty offences in 1992-93 was 1·8 million. Some 435,000 evaders were penalised, of which 242,000 settled out of court and 193,000 were successfully prosecuted. A further 180,000 evaders were encouraged to relicense their vehicles promptly as a direct result of enforcement activity. In a large proportion of the remaining cases, subsequent checks of the DVLA vehicle register revealed that the vehicles were in fact licensed and no offence had been committed. Other cases were not completed because of defects in offence reports, more than one report being received for the same offence, problems in tracking down offenders, difficulties in serving summonses and availability of resources.

Air Passenger Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the report by Edward James Trimble, the Principal Inspector of Accidents, entitled "The Management of Aircraft Passenger Survival in Fire."

Mr. Norris [holding answer 30 March 1994]: The report referred to is the thesis by Dr. E. Trimble undertaken in his own time under the auspices of the faculty of management of Robert Gordon university, Aberdeen. The conclusions of this thesis are therefore Dr. Trimble's and not necessarily those of the AAIB or the Department of Transport. The thesis carries a note to this effect. It is therefore not appropriate for copies to be deposited in the Library of the House.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the occasions on which the final approach separations used when there is no additional wake vortex separation requirement for Heathrow are less than the legal minima; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the reasons for the decision by the Civil Aviation Authority to authorise air traffic controllers employed by National Air Traffic Services who are qualified commercial pilots to undertake commercial AOC flying activities during their off-duty rest days; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the purpose of the National Air Traffic Services Safety Regulation Group interface document; and if he will place a copy in the Library;

(4) if the air traffic control separation monitoring function at London air traffic control centre, can respond to aircraft final approach separations applied by controllers at the Heathrow approach radar facility; what plans there are to re-programme the separation monitoring function; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 30 March 1994]: As these four questions all concern matters which are within the responsibility of the CAA, I am asking the chairman of the CAA to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for, and publish, a report from the Civil Aviation Authority as to its view on the research by Dr. E. J. Trimble, the Principal Inspector of Accidents, on the management of aviation passenger survival in situations of aviation fire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 30 March 1994]: the responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation, including the provision of passenger safety equipment, rests with the Civil Aviation Authority.

The authority published its view on passenger survival in situations of aviation fire in CAP 586, "Improving Passenger Survivability in Aircraft Fires: A Review". The authority's position on the issue of smokehoods, which is the main issue addressed by Dr. Trimble in his private research, was last published in the civil aviation publication CAP 594. I do not have any plans to call upon the authority to publish a direct response to the research in question from Dr. Trimble. However, I shall bring the hon. Member's question to the attention of the authority and ask it to write to him direct to explain its position regarding the conclusions reached by Dr. Trimble.

Vehicle Inspections

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, columns 106-7, which categories of vehicle other than public service were covered by his answer; and if he will give the corresponding figures for (a) goods vehicles and (b) other vehicles.

Mr. Key [holding answer 28 March 1994]: My answer of 21 March referred to public service vehicles only. the table attached to that answer shows in addition to the PSV figures, the annual roadworthiness sport checks for heavy goods vehicles, light goods vehicles, cars and motor cycles, as well as the traffic enforcement spot checks for heavy goods vehicles.

Rail Expenditure

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what will be the level of Government funding to each of the PTEs, via the relevant district or regional councils, for payment of Railtrack charges for 1994-95.

(2) what is the total section 20 spending for each PTA area for 1994-95 and that planned for 1995-96 and 1996-97.

Mr. Freeman: Figures are not available for planned section 20 spending in each passenger transport authority area. It is for each passenger transport executive to determine the level of local rail services to be provided, in the light of PTA policies for its area.

Assistance to local authority programmes is given through revenue support grant paid by the Department of the Environment in England and the Scottish Office in Scotland. An amount is provided within the all other services block for distribution to district councils in the six English metropolitan county areas in respect of their responsibility for supporting local rail services. For 1994-95 this element will be £112·9 million. In Scotland an amount is included in the aggregate external finance settlement, which for 1994-95 amounts to £35·2 million in respect of supported rail services in the Strathclyde region. These figures reflect estimates of the cost of maintaining services made on the basis of the railway charging principles applicable up to March 1994.

Under the new railway charging systems introduced on 1 April 1994 we expect the headline cost to PTEs of maintaining their existing service levels to increase. We have undertaken to cover the increased cost in 1994-95 by making special grant payments to the six PTAs in England and through similar payments to Strathclyde regional council. These will be sufficient, when taken together with the sums provided through the local government finance system, to cover the full cost to PTEs of maintaining their service levels, including the access charges relating to their services. For 1994-95 the PTEs will not be making payments direct to Railtrack for the access charges attributable to their rail services, but will be paying the subsidy required by BR to run the trains. BR, in turn, will pay access charges to Railtrack.

Thereafter, we intend to enhance the support provided through the local government finance system to reflect the net increase in the level of support required to maintain existing services in future years.

School Minibuses

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children have been killed and injured in school minibuses in the last year.

Mr. Key: In 1992, the latest year for which data are available, it is estimated that 105 school children were slightly injured, and three children were seriously injured in minibuses in journeys to and from school. In addition 193 school children were slightly injured and 19 seriously injured in minibuses on journeys other than going to and from school. There were no child fatalities in minibuses in 1992.

Seat Belts

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to ensure that no school minibus is used without adequate seat belts being fitted.

Mr. Key: We are currently considering the full technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts in all minibuses and coaches. We hope to publish the conclusions shortly.

Pelican Crossings

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what advice he gives to local authorities on the provision of pelican crossings where the criteria laid down by his Department are marginally above the traffic and road conditions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he intends to relax the conditions and criteria for the provision of pelican crossings where a community or parish council consider that local conditions demand such a crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The current advice given to local authorities is that the provision of crossings should not rest solely on the volumes of vehicles and pedestrians but should also take into account local features. The advice is contained in departmental advice note TA 52/87 "Design Considerations for Pelican and Zebra Crossings". A copy is in the Library. This advice is non-mandatory and it is entirely a matter for local judgment whether crossings can be justified at specific sites. Revised advice will be published this year which will stress the importance of taking a broad range of local factors into account rather than relying on rigid arithmetic factors.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether any of the consultants retained by him on the Post Office review have advised him of conflicts of interest.

Mr. Heseltine: On a number of occasions the consultants have approached the Department to determine whether work which they were contemplating undertaking for other clients would create a conflict of interest. Each such case has been considered and decided on its merits.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent on consultancies relevant to (a) the review of the Post Office and Parcelforce, (b) the review of the DTI research laboratories and the Atomic Energy Authority and (c) the review of the Accounts Services Agency, the Patent Office, Companies House and the Insolvency Service Agency in each of the calendar years 1992 and 1993; and how such expenditures are recorded in MINIS returns.

Mr. Eggar: Total expenditure on consultancy advice relating to the Post Office review and privatisation of Parcelforce amounted to £411,624·12 in the calendar year 1992 and £854,651·35 in 1993. On each of the other reviews a single company was appointed and the individual fees paid to these are commercially confidential. This expenditure is not recorded separately in MINIS. It can be found as part of the running costs or programme budget, as appropriate, in the form "O" of the relevant management unit's MINIS return.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether consultants continue to be employed on the review of Parcelforce and the Post Office; on what occasions such consultancies have been subject to renewal or renegotiations; and whether competitive tenders were sought on every such occasion.

Mr. McLoughlin: All appointments of consultants in connection with the Post Office review and the privatisation of Parcelforce have been made after a competitive tendering process. The resulting contracts have been extended as appropriate, and some remain in force. Details of individual contracts are commercially confidential.

Launch Aid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing which companies have received launch aid; what the total receipts and expenditure in cash and current prices has been; and what receipts and expenditure in current prices are expected to be in the current public expenditure policy period.

Mr. Heseltine: The information on launch aid is in the table:

	Past launch aid 1983-84 to 1993-94	Current public expenditure period 1994-95	1995-96	1996-97	1997-98

Wind Power Station, Humble Hill

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he intends to hold a public inquiry into the proposed Humble Hill wind power station, Northumberland.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions on the proposed windfarm are continuing. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will wish to take account of the outcome of those discussions before deciding whether to hold a public inquiry into the application.

Monopoly Inquiries

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the cost to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of its inquiry into (a) perfumes and fine fragrances and (b) ice cream supplies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The MMC estimates that the cost to it of carrying out these inquiries was £559,000 for fine fragrances and £368,000 for ice cream.

World Trade Organisation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how often a ministerial conference of the World Trade Organisation will be called; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The ministerial conference of the proposed World Trade Organisation is to meet every two years.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the voting arrangements for member nations of the World Trade Organisation.

Mr. Needham: Each member of the proposed World Trade Organisation will have one vote.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether measures to promote (a) sustainable development and (b) environmental protection are enshrined in the constitution establishing the World Trade Organisation.

Mr. Needham: A commitment to sustainable development is set out in the preamble of the proposed agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation. In addition, a work programme on trade and environment issues is to be agreed at the time of the Marrakech ministerial meeting. This will involve examination by the members of the WTO of a wide range of issues associated with the interaction of the rules of the trading system and environmental protection.

Consorzio Ital Offshore

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 656, what further steps he now proposes to take to reschedule the visit to Ital Offshore by Offshore Supplies Office officials; if he will approach the EU Commission under the terms of the Single European Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The invitation to OSO to visit CIO's fabrication site was unsolicited and was subsequently cancelled by the yard. Despite extensive discussions in the United Kingdom and Sicily, the OSO, working with the consulate general Naples, has been unable to establish grounds for making a formal complaint to the EU Commission about the Judy award.

Ethylene (Substitution)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place between BP Chemicals and his Department, and between his Department and the European Commission regarding the substitution of ethylene now being produced at BP Chemicals Baglan Bay from alternative sources.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. This is a matter for commercial decision by the company.

Caparo Judgment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for reversal of the Caparo judgment.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to seek to change the present state of the law.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for legislation under which the recognised supervisory bodies would owe a duty of care to individual shareholders.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to seek to change the present state of the law.

Healthcall (MMC Referral)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate whether there is a case for referring Healthcall to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Such investigations are a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading, and any concerns the hon. Member has should be directed to him.

European Union Trade Policies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the effects on United Kingdom sovereignty of the trade policies of the European Union.

Mr. Heseltine: Under article 113 of the treaty of Rome, the EC acts as a single party in most areas of trade policy. The Commission negotiates for the Community, in consultation with member states and subject to Council approval of resulting agreements. The United Kingdom remains a GATT contracting party, and will be an original member of the World Trade Organisation.

Environmental Technology Exhibition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what (a) Ministers and (b) staff attended the employment training "94 Environmental Technology" exhibition at Birmingham from 22 to 24 March.

Mr. Heseltine: Due to prior engagements no DTI Minister was able to attend the ET "94 Environmental Technology" exhibition. However, the DTI once again exhibited and also organised two seminars on the capabilities of United Kingdom environmental technology suppliers and export opportunities.

Aerosol Sprays

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it a mandatory requirement that all aerosol sprays which carry a "Flammable" warning label should also carry the flame symbol.

Mr. Heseltine: The use of the flame symbol is governed by Commission directive 67/548/EEC as amended, which has been implemented in this country by the Chemicals (Hazard Information and Packaging) Regulations 1993. The directive and these implementing regulations require the symbol to be used only where a product is labelled "Extremely Flammable" or "Highly Flammable" and not just "Flammable".

Immovable Property Transactions Report

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports other than the principal report by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens entitled "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers" have been commissioned by the European Commission in areas which might reasonably be expected to have an impact upon the detailed regulation of the United Kingdom's manufacturing and construction industries; if he will make it his policy in future to notify the House and industry of the commissioning of all such reports in future; and if he will make arrangements to ensure that British industry has the opportunity to be consulted in the preparation of all such reports.

Mr. Heseltine: The European Commission does not inform the United Kingdom Government of all the reports which it commissions.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning the extent to which copies of the principal report by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens entitled "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers" are available in other member countries of the European Community; what consultation about the recommendations of the report has been undertaken with industry in those countries; and what preliminary conclusions have been reached by the European Commission on those recommendations.

Mr. Heseltine: The Commission has not officially released the report, although we understand that some copies are in circulation. It is understood that the Commission has no plans at present to take forward the recommendations in the report.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether Her Majesty's Government were approached or consulted by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens during the research which they recently undertook and which led to the production of a principal report entitled "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers".

Mr. Heseltine: The Office of Fair Trading and the Lord Chancellor's Department were approached during the research before the report was made.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to the European Commission of the principal report by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens entitled "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers"; by whom, specifically, that report was commissioned; what is the status of that report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The European Commission has not disclosed the cost of the report which it commissioned. The status of the report is that it is an unreleased confidential report made to the European Commission.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to circulate copies of the principal report by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens entitled "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers" to the Confederation of British Industry, the National Association of Estate Agents, the Building Societies Association, the Building Employers Confederation, the Personal Investment Authority, the Law Society and all those financial services regulatory bodies whose members are involved in the provision of advice about lending in connection with immovable property purchase;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 204, whether he now intends to make available to industry copies of the principal report by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens entitled, "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers"; and if he will invite the comments of industry on the recommendations of that document;

(3) what plans he has to bring forward proposals to change the law in any of those areas which are his responsibility and which were included in the recommendations of the principal report by Wilde Sapte and Maclay Murray and Spens entitled "Information and Protection of Transactions concerning Immovable Property Purchased by Consumers".

Mr. Heseltine: The Government are not entitled to make public the contents of a confidential report which is the property of the European Commission.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department was first approached under aid and trade provisions for support for the Pergau dam; by which firm he was approached; and if he will set out, the dates of each step in the main sequence of events in his Department's consideration of the application.

Mr. Needham: According to DTI records, DTI officials were in frequent discussions during the summer of 1988 with Balfour Beatty and GEC about the Ulu Jelai hydro-electric project, which these two companies had formed a consortium to pursue, and for which they had applied for ATP in July 1988. On 20 September representatives of these companies expressed to DTI officials their interest in Pergau and GEC indicated that it was intending to apply for ATP for that project, rather than for Ulu Jelai. Subsequently a formal application for ATP dated 11 November was submitted by Balfour Beatty on behalf of the United Kingdom consortium. The industrial and commercial benefits that ATP support would bring to the United Kingdom were then assessed by DTI officials. Following approval by the then Minister for Trade on 20 January the ATP case paper was circulated to other Government Departments for consideration on 24 January 1989.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the dates and give the actual changes that occurred in the costs of the Pergau dam project and the detailed reasons that were given for the changes in costs.

Mr. Needham: A formal ATP application with a contract value of £315 million was lodged by Balfour Beatty on behalf of the United Kingdom consortium on 11 November 1988. On 3 March 1989 the United Kingdom consortium submitted a revised price of £316 million broken down by its various elements. No reason was given for the increase but it was known that the United Kingdom consortium had been working on its price since November 1988. Information on the further price rises to £397 million and £417 million respectively is contained in the National Audit Office report on the Pergau hydro-electric project, dated 22 October 1993. Copies of this are available in the Library of the House.

Technology Transfer Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved under, and give the regional distribution of expenditure incurred within each of the technology transfer programmes relating to (a) advanced control technology, (b) biochemical engineering and (c) neural computing technology in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The details requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Redundancies

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the compensation payments given to members of staff at the National Engineering laboratory and Warren Springs laboratory who have been made redundant in the last year.

Mr. Heseltine: There have been no redundancies at either the National Engineering laboratory or Warren Spring laboratory.

At both laboratories, staff numbers have been reduced through voluntary early retirement, voluntary early severance and through placement in other posts in the Department.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) to what extent administrative delays have resulted in a delay in his Department making a decision about regional selective assistance grants to Stone Plastics Ltd. and Tape Seals Ltd. of Atherstone, Warwickshire;

(2) whether his Department has investigated the effect on jobs and exports of delays in approving regional selective assistance grants for Stone Plastics and Tape Seals Ltd.

Mr. Needham: There have been no delays in reaching decisions on the regional selective assistance applications from Stone Plastics Ltd. and Tapeseals Ltd. Both cases are currently undergoing appraisal to determine whether the criteria for assistance are met.

Electricity Tariffs

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the different domestic electricity tariffs throughout the United Kingdom, in descending order of price.

Mr. Eggar: The information is set out in the table:

Domestic Electricity Tariffs 1 April 1994

	Standard tariff		Economy 7
	Standing charge per quarter (£)	P/kwh	Standing charge per quarter (£)	P/kwh (day)	P/kwh (night)

NB. Companies are listed in descending order of unit cost per kilowatt hour under the standard tariff.

Other Notes:

Manweb are giving a £10 rebate, Seeboard a £8 rebate and SWEB a £4·50 rebate.

Most companies offer a set reduction for payments by direct debit.

There are other tariffs by domestic consumers such as power key and special tariffs for storage heaters.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 648, if he will update his list of consultants commissioned to provide advice on the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Brodies WS was appointed on 22 March 1994 to provide legal advice in connection with Scottish aspects of the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to make further information available about coal privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: N. M. Rothschild will issue a preliminary memorandum on behalf of Her Majesty's Government on 13 April at 11 am. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received from (a) British Nuclear Fuels and (b) Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution as to the awarding of licensing instruments by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in the commissioning process for THORP at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: The issuing of a licensing instrument—LI—is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate, the NII. I understand that the NII, on completion of its assessment of the results of uranium testing at the THORP plant at Sellafield, issued an LI on 25 March. Reprocessing at THORP subsequently started on 27 March.

Arms Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what type, quantity and value of arms have been exported to south-east Asia in aggregate, without detailing country by country information, by the United Kingdom, in each year since 1985.

Mr. Needham: The available information is published regularly by the Ministry of Defence in "UK Defence Statistics" which is available from the Library of the House.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which banks backed the ECGD credits on the successive Government to Government arms deals with Jordan.

Mr. Needham: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to make public details of individual defence export orders or the related financing arrangements unless the relevant parties have agreed to this. No such agreement has been given in these cases.

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if there will be an evaluation of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme prior to privatisation; and if the Government will provide funds to meet the costs;

(2) whether the three-year evaluation of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme will continue; when the next evaluation will take place; and if Her Majesty's Government will provide funds to meet the cost of such an evaluation.

Mr. Eggar: It is proposed that after the privatisation of British Coal the industry pension schemes should have valuations at intervals of not more than three and a half years. The possibility of a further valuation of the staff superannuation scheme before privatisation is a matter for the trustees. The costs of valuations will continue to be met from scheme funds.

Electricity (French Interconnector)

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the ratio of United Kingdom imports to exports of electricity supply via the electricity supply link between the United Kindom and France in each year since 1986 on a quarterly basis and in the first quarter of 1994 expressed in gigajoules.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is set out in the table:

Note:
Information for the first quarter of 1994 is not yet available.

Coal Industry Bill

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the National Rivers Authority regarding the Coal Industry Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has received no representations from the National Rivers Authority on the Coal Industry Bill. The NRA has, however, provided comments in the context of the consultation exercise on the Coal Authority explanatory note and draft model licensing and leasing documents.

New and Renewables Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved under the new and renewables programme since its inception, together with the geographical distribution of the expenditure incurred.

Mr. Eggar: The list of projects approved under the new and renewable energy programme since its inception is very long and I will write to the hon. Member with a full list of approved projects in due course. I will place that letter in the Library of the House.

I regret that it will not be possible for this listing to provide a geographical distribution of the expenditure incurred. This information is not readily available and its presentation would entail disproportionate cost.

Overseas Projects Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) of 9 February, Official Report, column 323, if he will list all the members of the Overseas Projects Board since 1984 with the terms and conditions of the appointment, including any recompense, expenses or remuneration.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 21 February 1994, Official Report, columns 22-23.

With regard to conditions of service, appointments are made by the Minister of Trade normally for a period of three years. Members are required to treat all commercially classified material which they may obtain during the course of their membership as strictly confidential. Members are reminded that Government information is subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

Members are asked to provide the Department of Trade and Industry with a list of companies in which they hold directorships and/or have financial interests and to update the information as necessary. This list is treated in the strictest confidence and is not made available outside the Department.

The appointment does not carry rights to recompense, expenses or remuneration.

I have placed a copy of the board's terms of reference in the Library of the House.

Carrier Technology Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved under, and the regional distribution of expenditure incurred within, the carrier technology programme since its inception.

Mr. McLoughlin: One project on the application of chaos theory to the production of spring wire has been approved within the carrier technology programme. The project began in December 1993 and will last two years. It will cost £156,000 and has a DTI grant of £76,000. The Spring Research and Manufacturers Association of Sheffield, and the university of Warwick are the main collaborators.

Space and Satellite Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what review he is undertaking of the British space and satellite industry; and whether the retention of a directly owned British satellite manufacturing capability forms part of his strategy for competitiveness.

Mr. McLoughlin: My officials are in regular contact with the British space and satellite industry, although no specific review is currently being undertaken. In encouraging the British satellite manufacturing industry to enhance its competitiveness, we work with the companies involved on the best means of achieving that objective.

Manufacturing, Planning and Implementation Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved under, and the regional distribution of expenditure incurred, within the manufacturing, planning and implementation scheme since its inception.

Mr. McLoughlin: A list of projects approved under the manufacturing, planning and implementation scheme that have reached grant status is attached. The approximate distribution of expenditure by region is as follows:

	£ Thousand
North, West	900
North East	400
South West	550
South East	850
Yorkshire and Humberside	950
East Anglia	450
West Midlands	1,250
Scotland	500
Wales	300
East Midlands	800

Postal Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library returns showing for each country of the OECD, for each country of the European Union and for Jordan, Iraq, Iran and Saudi Arabia, the imports and exports of postal services as defined in the Standard International Trade Classification for each year between 1982 and 1993.

Mr. Needham: The only postal services recorded within the Standard International Trade Classification are SITC 911·0—mail not classified by kind. The information is not readily available for all the countries listed over the period requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information for some of the countries is published in the relevant country volumes of the "United Nations Commodity Trade Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Environmental Best Practice Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved under, and the regional distribution of expenditure incurred within, the environmental best practice programme since its inception.

Mr. McLoughlin: The environmental technology best practice programme is expected to be launched in June 1994. No expenditure under the programme has yet been incurred.

Advanced Technology Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the reasons for the closure of the advanced technology programme and support for innovation; and what evaluation of these programmes was carried out before their closure.

Mr. McLoughlin: The support for innovation scheme was withdrawn as a result of the decision, announced in the 1988 White Paper, "DTI—the Department for Enterprise", Cm 278, to end DTI support for near-market research and development through grants to individual companies. An evaluation of the scheme was carried out in July 1987.

The advanced technology programmes were closed in September 1993 following a further review of DTI's science and technology policy and programmes in the context of the White Paper on science, engineering and technology, "Realising our potential" (Cm 2250). The review decided that the balance of DTI's innovation support should be shifted away from generating new technology, on which DTI spend was less than 2 per cent. of industry's own research and development spend, towards technology transfer and exploitation and the promotion of innovation. Two programmes were evaluated; gallium arsenide in May 1991 and wealth from the oceans in December 1992.

Fees (Export Credit Cover)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on granting export credit cover on long-term project costs which include (a) initial design and other fees preparatory to the award of any contract or (b) any commissions or brokerage fees; what written guidance on such matters is available to ECGD or exporters; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Needham: Initial design and other preparatory fees can in principle be covered provided these are part of the overall export contract. Commissions and brokerage payments may also be eligible for export credit support if these form part of the exporter's overall costs of the contract.

There are no specific internal instructions in ECGD on cover for design and other preparatory fees. The internal instructions on cover for commission payments have been placed in the Library of the House. There is no written guidance for exporters on either issue; advice is usually given in the context of the contract being considered for ECGD support. Copies of ECGD's information guides for exporters are also being placed in the Library of the House.

"Good Government" Rule

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Exports Credits Guarantee Department observes any rules, or guidance similar, or equivalent to, the "good government" rule of the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Needham: The ODA's "good government" objective, alongside other objectives for the aid programme, is specifically designed to assist the ODA's decision making process.

The ECGD's function is to support United Kingdom exporters bidding for commercial contracts overseas by providing insurance and guarantees against the risks of non payment. In assessing these risks ECGD takes account of the economic and political circumstances of the markets in question as well as the credit worthiness of the individual buyers and borrowers concerned. It is a condition of the ECGD's guarantees that the exporter must obtain all necessary licences and authorisations for the exports to proceed.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff the Export Credits Guarantee Department has seconded to the British offset office at the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Needham: There are no ECGD staff seconded to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover (a) has been offered and (b) is outstanding in relation to the Saudi Arabia offset programme.

Mr. Needham: The answer is (a) Nil and (b) nil.

EDUCATION

Further Education

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what will be the role, remit, funding and governance of the new development agency for further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have accepted the broad thrust of recommendations from the further education funding councils, to establish a new body to support and develop the quality and delivery of further education. This new body will supersede the further education unit and the Staff college, and will build on the valuable contributions that both have made. Arrangements for the transition to the new body will be finalised in the light of discussion with the funding councils, the further education unit and the Staff college.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of the costs of the new development agency for further education will be met by is Department in each of the first three years of its existence.

Mr. Boswell: The Government intend that, over time, the new body should generate a substantial proportion of its income direct from colleges. It will be funded at the outset through a combination of block grant from the further education funding councils, and income from other sources including charges for services. The balance between these will depend on the needs and wishes of the customers, and the potential for attracting income.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the reasons for not including heads and governors of grant-maintained schools in the consultative processes which set the local management of schools formula for their schools.

Mr. Forth: Since 1 January 1994, local authorities have been required by law to consult heads and governors of grant-maintained schools in their area, as well as those of the schools which they maintain, about proposed amendments to their schemes of local management where these amendments constitute "significant variations" which require the Secretary of State's approval.

HMI/Ofsted Reports

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures his Department intends to take to ensure that HMI/Ofsted reports on private and independent schools which receive public funds are sent to parents of children at those schools.

Mr. Forth: All independent schools are monitored regularly as part of a programme of inspections by the Office for Standards in Education—Ofsted. Schools which are the subject of a published report are supplied with a stock of copies for distribution to parents, and are made aware that further copies may be obtained free from Ofsted. Ofsted also sends copies to the national and local press, thus alerting parents to the existence of the report and their right to obtain a copy.

School Buses (Seat Belts)

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to provide adequate funding to ensure seat belts are fitted to minibuses used by schools for the transportation of children.

Mr. Forth: The Department of Transport is currently reviewing the full technical and cost implications of fitting seatbelts to all minibuses and coaches, including those used for the transportation of school children. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be publishing his conclusions shortly.

Student Income and Expenditure Survey

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when his Department's survey of student income and expenditure was published for 1990, 1991 and 1992; when he expects the survey for 1993 to be published; and what expenditure was incurred on the preparation of each of these surveys.

Mr. Boswell: The report of the student income and expenditure survey for the 1992-93 academic year was published by Research Services Limited on 16 December 1993. The cost of the survey funded by the Department for Education was £181,000. The previous survey covered the 1988-89 academic year. There were no such surveys in the intervening years.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 269, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as listed:

Student Debts

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the current average debt of students in England to the Student Loans Company Ltd; (2) how many graduates became liable from 1 April to make repayments to the Student Loans Company Ltd.; what is the average debt; and what have been the changes in these figures since April 1993.

Mr. Boswell: These are matters for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Autism

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of educational support services provided for children with autism in England.

Mr. Forth: The effectiveness of educational provision in schools for pupils with special educational needs, including autism, which may include the effects of special educational needs support services, is inspected as part of the continuing inspection programme of the Office for Standards in Education.

School Inspections

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many local education authority school inspections have so far been awarded, despite a cheaper bid from the private sector; if he will total the differences between the value of the contract and the level of the lowest private bid in each of those cases; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the total of the differences between the value of the private sector contract, and the local education authority sector contract lowest bids submitted to Ofsted for each school inspection to date; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many Ofsted inspections have currently been awarded to (a) the private sector and (b) the local education authority sector; and what was the amount of each bid.

Mr. Robin Squire: The arrangements for inspecting schools under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 are a matter for Ofsted.

I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Literary Programmes

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, columns 520-21, what evaluation he has made of the literacy programmes mentioned in his answer.

Mr. Robin Squire: As I said in my answer of 28 March, the reading recovery trial is still in progress, as is the independent research project sponsored by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority. We will evaluate the programme once the trial and the research project have been completed.

Of the other GEST-funded literacy projects, some have only just been completed; others will not finish until March 1995. They will be evaluated in due course.

The adult literacy and basic skills unit is responsible for monitoring and evaluating the family literacy initiative. The unit will report to my right hon. Friend when the initiative has concluded.

The increased grant to the volunteer reading help—VRH—organisation is to help it expand its operation, particularly in the north of England. The organisation provides regular information to the Department on numbers of volunteers trained and placed with schools. The evidence provided by VRH is that its work provides an effective contribution to the raising of reading standards.

Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the level of funding by the Further and Higher Education Council to Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute in 1993-94; and what is the planned level in 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: In 1993-94, the Further Education Funding Council made available funding of £15,855 for the Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute. In 1994-95, provisional funding from the council, excluding any additional money for growth, will be £98,576.

Overseas Students (Fees)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing the fees charged for overseas students for each of the last five academic years, including the current academic year; and what proposals he has for levels of fees over the future public expenditure planning period.

Mr. Boswell: The Government do not set the level of fees charged to overseas students originating from outside the EC. Further and higher education institutions are expected to recover the full cost of the courses that they provide to overseas students. The establishment of fee levels therefore falls outside the public expenditure planning process.

The tables show the illustrative minimum fee levels circulated by the Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals and the Council of Local Education Authorities over the last five academic years as guidance to institutions in determining their fee levels.

Reading Skills

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, columns 520-21, what plans he has to develop the existing specific programmes to improve reading skills among young children beyond 1995; and what plans he has to ensure that the expertise gained by those involved in reading recovery programmes will be utilised after 1995.

Mr. Robin Squire: No decisions have been taken about specific programmes beyond 1995. As I said in my answer of 28 March, we will consider what further action might be taken on reading recovery in the light of evidence from the trial and the independent research project, both of which have yet to be completed.

Dogs

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will make a statement on the activities of commercial concerns in the promotion of dog ownership in primary schools;

(2) how many educational visits to schools have been made by dog wardens and other agencies with interest in dogs since 1988;

(3) what measures the Government intend to take to end the promotion of dog ownership to primary school children.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally. Individual schools and the parents of the pupils concerned will wish to take a responsible attitude to dog ownership.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total cost of official entertaining in his Department in each year since 1990-91; if he will list the receptions held in each year at his Department's expense; and what was the cost of each reception.

Mr. Boswell: The information available is as follows:

1990-91	57
1992-93	96

The cost of official entertainment in each of these years is included in the running cost expenditure for the Department which is published every year in the annual report; figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. The entertainment budget is used for a variety of functions including receptions. Separate figures are not kept for individual functions.

SCOTLAND

Official Entertainment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of official entertaining in his Department in each year since 1990-91; if he will list the receptions held in each year at his Department's expense; and what was the cost of each reception.

Mr. Lang: Total expenditure on ministerial hospitality for the years in question was:

Year	£
1990-91	65,123
1991-92	62,800
1992-93	94,385
1993-94	49,805

Expenditure on hospitality is included within the running cost expenditure for my Department which is published each year in the annual report. The hospitality budget is used for a variety of functions including receptions but providing details of individual events would incur disproportionate costs.

Highlands and Islands Veterinary Service

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which bodies he has consulted regarding possible changes to the Highland and Islands veterinary services schemes following the completion of consultants reports on the scheme; and when he issued any consultation guidelines.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 31 March 1994]: The following organisations were sent a copy of the consultant's report on 4 June 1991; and were invited to comment.

British Veterinary Association
Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons
Crofters Commission
Scottish Crofters Union
Highlands and Islands Enterprises
Convention of Scottish Local Authorities
Strathclyde Regional Council
Highland Regional Council

Conservation Areas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of the land area in (a) Scotland and (b) Highland region is covered by the proposed list of special areas of conservation which he has received from Scottish Natural Heritage;

(2) what proportion of the sites of special scientific interest in (a) Scotland and (b) Highland region are included in the proposed list of special areas of conservation which he has received from Scottish Natural Heritage.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 31 March 1994]: Scottish Natural Heritage, in conjunction with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, has submitted to the Government a preliminary and confidential list of sites from which candidate special areas of conservation under the EC habitats directive, 92/43/EEC, may be chosen. This list does not constitute a list of proposed special areas of conservation, but merely a contribution to the Government's consideration of what sites may be proposed as candidate special areas of conservation.

The Government expect to publish for consultation later this year proposals for candidate special areas of conservation.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take advice from the local authorities on the economic and social needs of those areas contained in the proposed list of special areas of conservation he has received from Scottish Natural Heritage prior to its issue for public consultation.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 31 March 1994]: The preliminary advice received from Scottish Natural Heritage does not constitute a list of proposed special areas of conservation. The Government believe that when a list of candidate special areas of conservation has been prepared, the owners and occupiers of those sites should be the first to be informed. Nonetheless, the Scottish Office would be interested in any advice which local authorities might care to give about areas which they consider suitable or unsuitable for proposal as special areas of conservation.

Civil Servants (EC Matters)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give numbers, ranks and departments within Scottish Office of those civil servants who work exclusively on EC affairs; which are monitoring EC activities; and which are administering and advising on grants.

Mr. Lang: The number of staff from grade HEO to grade 5 who spend a significant proportion of their time on EC business in each of the departments of the Scottish Office is set out in the table. Figures are not available for grades other than those listed.

The figures indicate the overall percentage of time which officers spend on EC work; information on the proportion of time spent on the different aspects of EC business is not available.

Lamb Losses

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what scientific evidence he has that fox destruction clubs are actually reducing lamb losses; how the extent of economic loss compares with expenditure on funding fox destruction clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Studies carried out by the Scottish Office and others indicate that between 1 per cent. and 2 per cent. of viable lambs may be predated by foxes. Losses at the level of 1 per cent. would represent some £1·2 million per annm compared with grants amounting to £70,068 in 1993-94. If foxes are numerous, predation on lambs may increase. The fox destruction clubs have been successful in reducing the numbers of foxes by between 3,500 and 4,000 a year mainly before and during the lambing period. A further study of this matter is neither necessary nor would it be practicable at reasonable cost.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the geological survey reports relating to the Skye bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A copy of the geological survey reports were lodged in the Library last year following a similar request from the hon. Gentleman on 8 February 1993.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he holds centrally about the specific skill shortages that Government training schemes are remedying.

Mr. Stewart: Information on specific skill shortages remedied by Government training schemes is not held centrally. It is the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, through their respective networks of local enterprise companies, to deliver Governnment training schemes, with the aim of providing young people and unemployed adults with the skills, vocational qualifications and work experience to help meet the needs of local labour markets.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts currently being worked on for his Department by Coopers and Lybrand, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse, BDO Binder Hamlyn, KPMG Peat Marwick, Grant Thornton, Robson Rhodes, Levy Gee, Hacker Young, Pannell Kerr Forster and Stoy Hayward.

Mr. Lang: My Department does not maintain a central record of all current contracts and it would be disporportionately costly to compile the information sought. Information is available for the 1993-94 financial year and the details are as follows.

Name of company and contract

PRICE WATERHOUSE
1. Finance Group Review

European Regional Development Trust

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual sums of money committed since the inception of the European regional development trust to each recipient local authority and each regional council and the annual amounts paid to each from the fund.

Mr. Stewart: The information is not readily available in the form requested. Since 1975, local authorities in Scotland have received awards totalling almost £677 million which have resulted in payments to date totalling almost £576 million. The total awards and payments to each recipient local authority are as follows:

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish Enterprise about its ability to respond to the training needs of existing work forces within Government guidelines.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations from Scottish Enterprise. His officials in the Scottish Office Industry Department meet and discuss with Scottish Enterprise officials from time to time a range of issues affecting delivery of Government training programmes, including the application of the guidelines governing these programmes.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish Enterprise about the adequacy of the supply of serviced sites of differing sizes in the Scottish economy.

Mr. Stewart: Ensuring an adequate supply of suitable sites and premises for businesses, including inward investors, is a key function of the enterprise bodies; and it is a matter on which Scottish Enterprise and the Scottish Office are in regular contact.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 21 February 1994, Official Report, columns 51-52 and to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) of 16 March 1994, Official Report, columns 659-60.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information technology consultants his Department has employed, for what purpose and at what total cost, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 21 February 1994, Official Report, columns 51-52 and to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman), on 16 March 1994, Official Report, columns 659-60. These include details of information technology consultancy contracts.

Dounreay

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Paris Commission's policy agreed in June 1993 will be used in deciding whether to allow the Dounreay reprocessing plant to increase levels of radioactive discharge.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 March 1994]: Recommendations of the Paris Commission are not binding although the United Kingdom complies with those it accepts. The United Kingdom entered a reservation to recommendation 93/5 and takes the view that it is inappropriate for the Commission to have a role in the approval or rejection of individual projects. Nevertheless, the United Kingdom takes most seriously its commitments under the Paris convention and it is expected that the national competent authority will have full regard to these commitments in arriving at decisions in respect of the current applications for revised discharge authorisations at Dounreay.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements made for international scrutiny and consultation on allowing increased radioactive discharge from Dounreay reprocessing plant.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 March 1994]: All international obligations with respect to the current applications for a revised discharge authorisation for Dounreay will be complied with.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all Forestry Commission woods currently for sale in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England; and if he will give details of all current targets for the disposal of Forestry Commission land both by area and projected income.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 23 March 1994]: The areas of forest land currently being offered for sale by the Forestry Commission on the open market are given below.

As set out in the Government's expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, the commission plans to sell about 15,000 hectares of forest land in each of the next three years, and expects to receive a total of about £61 million from the sale of forest land and surplus properties during that period.

Secondary School Teachers

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of graduates trained as secondary school teachers at each college in Scotland for the past 10 years and the subjects being studied; if he will list the number of new graduate teachers employed per local authority in that time; if he will show what occupations each graduate qualifying in secondary school teaching has entered in the last 10 years; if he will list the cost of the training of graduate secondary school teachers in each year since 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 March 1994]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The number of graduates trained as secondary school teachers by subject area is set out in statistical bulletins published by the Scottish Office in June 1992 and December 1993—reference numbers Edn/G1/1992/8 and Edn/G1/1993/11—copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Tables 1 and 2 following provide information about the number of newly qualified secondary teachers known to have been appointed to teaching posts in Scotland and the first destination of newly qualified teachers. Table 3 provides information about the cost of training secondary school teachers.

Notes:

1. Information on the first destination of newly qualified teachers is obtained from a twice-yearly survey of graduates from the five colleges of education and former colleges of education. The first survey is taken at September following graduation; a follow-up survey takes place in March.
2. There is a high level of non-response to this survey, so that currently the first destination of around 25 per cent. of newly qualified teachers is unknown. Direct comparison between years is complicated by the effect of varying degrees of non-response to the survey in different years.
3. Figures are unavailable prior to 1987.
4. Information on the nature of non-teaching employment is unavailable.
5. The figures in both tables include an element of estimation in cases where only partial information is known.
6. Information on Stirling University teacher training graduates is not available in this form.

Notes:

1. Information for earlier years is unavailable.
2. The information is based upon returns from teacher training institutions (other than the University of Stirling) detailing course costs. The figures include also an estimate of student support costs, assuming entitlement to full maintenance grant and loan at the "home" rates.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Taxes

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to permit the contracting out of local tax collection, including the exercise of discretion in granting discounts and initiating prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have issued a consultation paper setting out my intentions, subject to the passage of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill. This was sent to interested parties and placed in the Library on 25 March.

Air Pollution

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase (a) the number of nitrogen dioxide pollution monitoring sites in London and (b) the number of London sites in the enhanced urban network of air quality monitoring stations; and what is the average cost of each pollution monitoring site.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to extending the enhanced urban monitoring network to cover all major cities by 1997. In addition the Government are currently considering responses to the recently published consultation paper on "The Future of Air Quality Monitoring Networks in the United Kingdom", in which proposals were made to develop a framework which draws local and national air quality monitoring together into a coherent quality assured network. Any expansion in the number of monitoring sites within the London area will be made in the context of these two initiatives.

The average cost to establish an enhanced urban network site is of the order of £110,000 with an additional annual running cost of £75,000. The capital cost of establishing an automatic nitrogen dioxide monitoring site is about £30,000 with a subsequent annual running cost of an additional £25,000.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for co-ordinating the collection and assessment of air pollution data from local authority environmental health department monitoring equipment and his Department's network of pollution monitoring stations.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are considering responses to the recently published consultation paper on "The Future of Air Quality Monitoring Networks in the United Kingdom", which included proposals to develop a framework which draws local and national air quality monitoring together into a coherent quality assured network.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the OPSIS users group of local authority air pollution monitoring equipment users.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is aware of the work of this group.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received to resite the Frederick street, Cardiff, air pollution monitoring station away from the pedestrian shopping precinct and to resite the Croft street monitoring station away from the traffic management scheme area; what guidelines he has issued as to the priority of (a) kerbside and (b) pedestrian congregation areas for measurement of vehicle exhaust emission levels as regards (a) PM10 and (b) benzene; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question on 30 March, Official Report, column 872, on siting criteria for air quality monitoring.

I have received no representation on the siting of the Frederick street or Croft street monitoring stations. I have published no guidelines on the priority or otherwise of kerbside and pedestrian congregation areas for air quality monitoring purposes.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the guidelines pertaining to the siting requirements for air pollution monitoring stations; what proposals he has for ensuring that vehicle exhaust emission air pollution is measured by monitoring stations located in sites other than in pedestrian precincts; what representations he has received in relation to the location of the air pollution monitoring station at Frederick street, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 31 March 1994]: The siting criteria of the Department of the Environment's enhanced urban network are given in the "Enhanced Urban Monitoring Network Site Operators Manual". A copy of the siting criteria have been placed in the Library of the House. Sites which are established to monitor compliance with an EC directive are located according to the requirements of the directive. Air quality is monitored at the kerbside monitoring station at Cromwell road, London within 1m of the road.

I have received no representation on the location of the air quality monitoring station at Frederick street, Cardiff.

Water Pollution

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water courses have been polluted through water from disused coal mines in the county of Durham; and if he will give their locations.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority is carrying out an assessment of water pollution from disused coal mines in the Durham coalfield and has identified a number of cases where there has been a localised impact. Details are available from the NRA's Northumbria and Yorkshire region.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) of 24 January, Official Report, column 32, which organisation or individual is doing the research into the operation of consents under the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990; what is its cost; on what date it was commissioned; what consultations were undertaken to determine the terms of reference of the research; when the report will be received; and if he will publish the research and its findings.

Mr. Baldry: Following competitive bids, the research contract was awarded to Staffordshire university. The project commenced on 1 November 1993 and is expected to be completed by the end of April. The cost of the project will be in the region of £30,000, including VAT. The normal consultations were carried out on the terms of reference of the research. It is the Department's usual practice to publish research reports.

Waste Management

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he accepts recommendation 234 of the deregulation task force with regard to exempting recyclate from the waste management regime.

Mr. Atkins: The substantial deregulation action that my Department is taking in relation to all the task force recommendations to reduce unnecessary controls on business, including the metal recycling industry, while safeguarding environmental and public safety is fully set out in each of the three categories at pages 36 to 44 of the DTI publication, "Deregulation—Cutting Red Tape," which was issued on 19 January. A copy of this publication was placed in the Library on that date.

Kirklees Council

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the debt of Kirklees council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The total external debt of Kirklees metropolitan council was £261 million at 31 March 1993.

We shall continue to encourage authorities to reduce its indebtedness.

London (Elected Authority)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the responses to his consultation paper, "London, Making the Best Better", referred to the need for a democratically elected citywide authority for London.

Sir George Young: Some 17 per cent. of the people responding to the consultation exercise said they would like to see the creation of a single elected authority for London and a further 6 per cent. made a specific reference to the GLC. In addition, 5 per cent. of respondents mentioned some form of single strategic planning authority for London, 1 per cent. an elected mayor, and 2 per cent. a combination of two or more of the suggestions.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to ensure that the single regeneration budget is fair and equitable to all sections of the community.

Mr. Baldry: The bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget, which will be issued shortly following extensive consultation, will make it clear that the budget is intended to benefit, among others, those sections of the community which are at a disadvantage, the young and ethnic minorities, and will help to promote equal opportunities. Monitoring arrangements will be put in place to ensure that support through the budget reaches those people it is intended to benefit.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he will issue in relation to the implementation of the European Union habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: A planning policy guidance note—PPG—on nature conservation will be issued shortly before regulations transposing the habitats directive come into force. Guidance and advice on other aspects of the directive may be provided as appropriate to affected land owners and occupiers and others either by the Government or the statutory nature conservation agencies.

River Pollution

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report on pollution problems relating to Black Clough, Cliviger, Burnley, from the National Rivers Authority and North West Water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I understand that the National Rivers Authority has investigated water pollution of Black Clough from the closed Black Clough, Deerplay and Hilltop collieries. The consultation paper "Paying for our Past", published on 8 March, said that the justifiction for the special exemptions for abandoned mines should be reassessed in the light of the emerging conclusions of the review of contaminated land and liabilities, and invited views on the exemptions.

Sewage Pumping

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue advice to water companies as to the desirability of reducing energy consumption expended in pumping of sewage towns and the countryside prior to treatment.

Mr. Atkins: The energy expended by companies in carrying out their business is a commercial matter for the individual companies concerned. However, the Department is concerned that energy is used as efficiently as possible and encourages companies to consider energy efficiency to reduce their consumption. Indeed, for many years my energy efficiency office has actively promoted the take-up of efficiency measures through initiatives such as the best practice programme. It offers advice and guidance on reducing energy consumption to industry, commerce and the domestic sectors. A number of publications aimed specifically at reducing energy consumption in the water industry are available from the Energy Efficiency Office and the water research centre. Some of the material from the EEO was produced in conjunction with the centre and with water companies such as South West Water.

Combined heat and power is one element of the programme that the EEO encourages wherever it is cost-effective. This is a very efficient and environmentally friendly option and is particularly suited to the water industry as it can use the sewage gas produced as a by-product from the treatment of sewage to produce electricity and useful heat. Thus the sewage itself could produce the electricity required to pump the sewage prior to and after treatment.

Subsistance Allowances

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure the subsistance and car allowances for elected representatives in local government are not lower then those provided for justices of the peace; and if he will discuss with the Chancellor of the Exchequer the question of the taxation of councillors' subsistance allowances.

Mr. Baldry: We are currently reviewing the ceilings on councillors' travel and subsistence allowances in the light of the recommendations of the working party on internal management. The tax treatment of such allowances is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to determine.

Consultation Papers (Responses)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of responses to the consultation paper, "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies"; how many responses supported the proposals; and what is the highest number of responses received to a consultation paper of his Department.

Sir George Young: In total we have received over 9,000 responses to the consultation paper. Our proposals cover a range of issues, and the more considered the responses have addressed each separately; consequently there is no simple distinction between those supporting the proposals and the remainder.

My Department has on occasions received substantially more representations on other matters of widespread interest.

Cable Laying

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to investigate the effect of increased cable laying on street trees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The effects of cable laying on street trees will be illustrated in guidelines which should be published later this year. With the assistance of my Department, these guidelines are being drawn up by the utility and arboricultural associations, and will provide constructive advice on how to ensure that cable laying results in the least possible damage to trees.

Vacant Local Authority Houses, Leeds

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the most recent figures he has for the total number of local authority houses vacant in Leeds; and what proportion of these are management lets.

Sir George Young: The latest available information reported by Leeds city council shows that 1,454 of its dwellings were vacant at 1 April 1993; some 62 per cent. of these were management vacants—that is, dwellings available for letting immediately or after minor repairs.

Metal Recycling

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made on the effect of forthcoming waste management regulations on the asset base of the metal recycling industry;

(2) what representations he has received on the effect of the intended waste management regulations on the asset base of the metal recycling industry.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has received representations on this matter from the secondary metals industry. The waste management licensing regulations will require holders of waste management licences to remain responsible for discharging the conditions of the licence until the condition of the site, insofar as it arises from the handling of waste carried on at the site, is such that the licence may be surrendered. If a licensed metal recycler carries out his activities in such a way that the condition of the land is unlikely to cause pollution or harm to human health then there will be no bar to the surrender of a licence and the realisation of the asset value of a site. If pollution or harm is caused or is likely, that might be expected to affect the asset value of a site irrespective of the provisions of waste law.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each of the deregulation task force's recommendations as they affect the metal recycling industry indicating whether the Government have accepted the recommendations or not; and in the case of acceptance of the recommendations, what action the Government intend to take.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall).

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the application of article 11 of the EC framework directive on waste in exempting metal recycling from licence provision in each of the member states.

Mr. Atkins: Article 11 of the EC framework directive on waste permits member states to make exemptions from permits for activities involving the recovery of waste, including metal recovery, subject to provisos directed at the protection of the environment. It is for each member state to decide how to implement the provisions of the directive. My Department does not hold detailed information on relevant national law in other member states.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the effect of describing waste management licences issued to recyclers of non-ferrous metals as metal recycling licences; and how the conditions for the issue of metal recycling licences will differ from those attached to the issue of waste management licences.

Mr. Atkins: The waste management licensing regulations will require persons who recover waste, including waste non-ferrous metal, to do so under a waste management licence, except insofar as their activities may be exempted under the regulations. I have accepted the suggestion of the secondary metals industry that those waste management licences authorising the recovery of metal should be described as "metal recovery licences" to help to focus attention on the distinctive features of the industry. The Government will be issuing advice in a waste management paper on the conditions appropriate to licences for metal recovery.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures he has taken or will take to meet the obligation under the Basle convention article 4(2a) to ensure that the generation of hazardous waste within the United Kingdom is reduced to a minimum taking into account social, technological and economic aspects;

(2) what measures he has taken or will take to meet the obligation under the Basle convention article 4(9a) to ensure that transboundary movement of hazardous waste will be allowed only if the United Kingdom does not have the technical capacity, necessary facilities or suitable disposal sites to dispose of the wastes in an environmentally sound manner;

(3) how he will ensure that exporters of hazardous waste comply with the obligation under the Basle convention article 4(8) and article 4(10) to which the United Kingdom becomes a full party on 8 May, to ensure that hazardous waste exported for recycling before 31 December 1997 is managed in an environmentally sound manner; which United Kingdom authorities will be responsible; what guidance he plans to issue to exporters and the relevant authorities; who will carry the costs of meeting this obligation; what extra resources will be made available to the relevant authorities; and what action he will take to prevent waste shipments where the exporter has not yet demonstrated that he can meet the obligation;

(4) what redress will be available in the United Kingdom from the date when the United Kingdom becomes a full party to the Basle convention to those harmed by hazardous waste exports from the United Kingdom before 31 December 1997 which are not managed in an environmentally sound manner, in contravention of the Basle convention article 4(8).

Mr. Atkins: On waste minimisation I would refer the hon. Member to chapter 23 of "Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy", Cm 2426, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

The hon. Member may have misinterpreted article 4(9) of the Basle convention. I would refer him to sub-paragraphs (b) and (c) of that article, which are equal in weight to sub-paragraph (a). Sub-paragraph (b) allows for the movement of wastes where they are required as a raw material for recycling or recovery industries in the state of import; and sub-paragraph (c) allows for waste movements which are in accordance with other criteria to be decided by the parties.

The obligations of the Basle convention will be implemented in the European Community by council regulation EEC 259/93. As regards the hon. Member's reference to paragraphs (8) and (10) of article 4 of the Basle convention, I have nothing to add to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Deva) on 2 March, Official Report, column 714, and my right hon. Friend's answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 30 March, Official Report, columns 866-67.

The Government aim fully to comply with their obligations under the Basle convention to require that hazardous wastes or other wastes exported from the United Kingdom are managed in an environmentally sound manner.

River Thames

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds he expects to be devoted to projects or events which he has so far publicised in respect of the River Thames in London; and under whose auspices they will be spent and managed.

Sir George Young: In relation to the Thames festival, a steering group which is chaired by Clive Priestley, chairman of the London Arts Board and includes representatives of London First, the London Council for Sport and Recreation, the Sports Council, the Department of the Environment and others will shortly be considering a feasibility study and business plan for the festival, including its funding and overall management.

Announcements will be made shortly about the funding and management of the preparation of the Thames study and feasibility study for the Thames cycle route.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what specific matters in respect of the Thames in London he has consulted the London Rivers Association.

Sir George Young: The London Rivers Association was formally consulted in March 1993 on the Government's approach to the east Thames corridor. Officials have also met the association for a general discussion on Thames issues. In addition, the London Rivers Association has been formally consulted about a number of issues connected with the work of the Thames working group chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has already had concerning his suggestion for events relating to the Thames in 1995; and what statutory duties he or his Department have for the Thames in London (a) directly and (b) indirectly through statutory bodies.

Sir George Young: The Department of the Environment in association with the London Arts Board, the London Council for Sport and Recreation, London First, the National Rivers Authority and others is assisting with the preparation of a feasibility study for a Thames Festival in 1995.

Apart from any functions conferred by local enactments, the Secretary of State has the same direct responsibilities towards the Thames as for other rivers.

The Department has an indirect statutory duty through the preparation of planning policy advice which the London boroughs have to take account of in preparing their unitary development plans and in exercising development control.

The Department also has responsibility for determining applications under the town and country planning legislation that may come before my right hon. Friend on appeal or call-in.

The Department of the Environment also sponsors the National Rivers Authority, which is responsible for pollution control, flood defence and water resources management of the River Thames in London. The NRA also has duties in relation to conservation and recreation and is responsible, upstream of Teddington lock, for navigation and fisheries management.

Energy Savings Trust

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for funding the Energy Savings Trust.

Mr. Atkins: The intention is that funds for schemes sponsored by the Energy Saving Trust will continue to be derived principally from electricity and gas tariff consumers.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the proposed timetable for the promotion of energy conservation schemes by the Energy Savings Trust, as set out in paragraph 3.36 of "Climate Change, the UK Programme", Cm 2427.

Mr. Atkins: I understand that the Energy Saving Trust is to announce its strategic plan shortly.

County Hall, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, columns 661-62, what has been done with the balance of the capital receipt from the sale of county hall, London, which was not distributed to the London boroughs and the City of London.

Mr. Baldry: At the end of 1993, in accordance with the terms of the London Government Reorganisation (Capital Money) (Greater London) (Amendment) Order 1993, the London residuary body distributed to the London boroughs and the City of London all its capital money, including capital receipts received up to the end of November.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, columns 661-62, what reasons underlay his decision to refuse to disclose the sum received from the sale of county hall, London, on the grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are not party to the sale of county hall. The terms of the sale—including the sale price—were and remain confidential between the London residuary body and the purchasers.

North Sea

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the quality status report on the North sea.

Mr. Atkins: I am placing copies in the Library today. Copies of six reports produced by the United Kingdom on sub-regions of the North sea are also being placed in the Library.

HM Inspectorate of Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans have been made to close any of the regional offices of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Atkins: No plans have been made to close any of the regional offices of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Energy Savings Trust

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Director General of Ofgas about the funding of the Energy Savings Trust.

Mr. Atkins: I am aware of the Director General of Gas Supply's views about the use of the E factor arrangements to fund incentive schemes facilitated by the Energy Savings Trust, and officials from my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry are currently reviewing the position with the Office of Gas Supply.

Rent Levels

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the average rent levels in local authority housing for 1994-95, broken down into separate authorities.

Sir George Young: This information is taken from local housing authorities' own returns, which are currently being sent to my Department. It will be placed in the Library at the earliest opportunity.

Radioactive Waste (Dumping at Sea)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out an explanation for the inclusion at paragraph 14 of the description of vote 5 of class VII supply estimates for 1994-95 on central environmental services, of a potential expenditure arising from the indemnification by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority of certain ship owners in respect of third parties arising from dumping of radioactive waste at sea.

Mr. Atkins: Details of the potential expenditure were laid before the House in a minute dated 17 August 1978, Cmnd. 7316, a copy of which is in the Library. The liability, previously contained on a token subhead, has, since the minute was first presented, been replaced by the reference in paragraph 14 of the introduction to class VIII, vote 5. The reference relates only to potential claims form persons in countries which are not parties to the Paris convention on third party liability in the field of nuclear energy. The United Kingdom ceased sea dumping of radioactive waste in 1982.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement setting out the purposes of the single regeneration budget and those constituent schemes which it encompasses.

Mr. Baldry: The single regeneration budget is intended to improve local areas and enhance the quality of life of local people by tackling need, stimulating wealth creation and improving competitiveness. It will encourage local partners to come together to plan a strategic approach to these needs and priorities. The programmes which are included in the budget are as follows:

From the Department of the Environment
- Estate Action
- Housing Action Trusts
- City Challenge/Urban Programme
- Urban Regeneration Agency
- Urban Development Corporations
- Inner City Task Forces
- City Action Teams

From the Employment Department
- Programme Development Fund
- Education Business Partnerships
- Teacher Placement Service
- Compacts/Inner City Compacts
- Business Start-Up Scheme
- Local Initiative Fund
- TEC Challenge

From the Home Office
- Safer Cities
- Section 11 Grants (part)
- Ethnic Minority Grant
- Ethnic Minority Business Initiative

From the Department of Trade and Industry
- Regional Enterprise Grants
- (plus English Estates, to be subsumed into English Partnerships)

From the Department for Education
- Grants for Education Support and Training (part)

Lakes (Rescue Services)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what rescue facilities exist on large lakes; and what support is offered by the Government to rescue services on large lakes.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Rescue facilities on large lakes vary locally. My Department does not provide support to rescue services but marine district safety committees, which cover the whole of the United Kingdom, have been carrying out a wide-ranging review of the way in which responsibilities for safety, rescue and accident prevention are presently distributed.

Water Filtering Equipment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what chemicals involved in the production of water filtering equipment, referred to in his letter of 22 March to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, may be diverted to military use.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 28 March 1994]: I have been asked to reply.

Possible military uses of the chemicals approved in the United Kingdom for addition to the water supply for the purposes of purfication are in the table:

Chemical	Use in water purification	Possible military use
Calcium Hypochlorite	Disinfectant	None known
Chlorine	Disinfectant	Historically this has been used as a 'poison gas'.
Chlorine Dioxide	Disinfectant	None known
Hydrogen Peroxide	Disinfectant	If the concentration is greater than 85 per cent. then it may be used as a fuel additive.
Sodium Chlorite	Disinfectant	None known
Sodium Hypochlorite	Disinfectant	None known

DEFENCE

North Korea

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the impact of the situation in North Korea on British defence policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We are monitoring the situation in the Korean peninsula closely, and share the concerns of the international community over North Korea's nuclear programme.

Bosnia

18. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the role of British forces in Bosnia.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend and I continue to receive a wide range of representations from a variety of sources on this subject.

19. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with General Sir Michael Rose regarding the situation in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: During his visit to Bosnia last month, my right hon. and learned Friend met Lieutenant General Sir Michael Rose and was fully briefed on the situation in Bosnia, and again subsequently. The achievements of the United Nations and General Rose in securing a ceasefire in Sarajevo for the first time in two years, and the subsequent ceasefire in central Bosnia, are to be highly commended.

20. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to visit Bosnia to discuss the need for the deployment of further forces.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend announced the deployment of a further 900 troops to Bosnia in his statement to the House on 10 March, Official Report, column 397. He has since visited the former Yugoslavia and had discussions with United Nations commanders there about a variety of issues, including troop deployments.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops and backup forces are currently involved in the United Nations operation in Bosnia; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently some 3,300 British service men deployed on the ground in the former Yugoslavia, with a further 3,000 based offshore and in Italy, engaged in operations in support of UN Security Council resolutions. The additional cost of their deployment is estimated to be around £125,000,000 for the financial year 1994-95, some of which is recoverable from the UN.

D-day Anniversary

21. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what preparations are being made by his Department over the 50th anniversary of D-day.

Mr. Hanley: My Department is organising the official military commemorations of the 50th anniversary of D-day under the chairmanship of my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence. These commemorations were announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 6 January and brief details have been placed in the Library of the House.

Fleet Maintenance

22. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the amount of fleet maintenance work available to HM royal dockyards over the next 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: As my hon. Friend is aware, fleet maintenance involves work carried out on front line units during operational time and does not include refitting. Little such work is, therefore, undertaken at the royal dockyards. There are no plans to change this arrangement.

23. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ban fox hunting in the defence forces.

Mr. Hanley: Although fox hunting is not a recognised sport in any of the three services, certain hunts have licences to hunt over MOD land.

Army (Size)

24. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the size of the British Army.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 8 February 1994, Official Report, column 134.

Defence Capability

25. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether the United Kingdom defence capability is sufficient to safeguard the realm and to respond to NATO obligations and United Nations demands.

Mr. Hanley: The assessment of the balance between commitments, capabilities and resources is a continuous activity within the Ministry of Defence. "Defending Our Future", the 1993 statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm 2270), set out our assessment of the tasks our armed forces are called upon to undertake and the capabilities we deploy. The Government remain confident that the armed forces are able to carry out the broad spectrum of operations which they currently undertake: for our own protection, contributing to collective defence with our allies through NATO, and promoting our wider security interests through support for the maintenance of international peace and stability.

26. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet his Western European Union counterparts to discuss future policy relating to the middle east.

Mr. Hanley: Whilst my right hon. and learned Friend regularly meets his WEU counterparts, future policy relating to the middle east is not currently on the agenda for the next planned meeting.

Aero Engine Capability

27. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect on national defence of maintaining an independent aero engine capability in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: A viable and effective aerospace industry makes an important contribution to the defence interests of this country. The implications of any proposed change in the ownership of any substantial defence industry capability would be considered if and when it arose.

Dedicated Attack Helicopter

28. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had recently concerning the acquisition of a dedicated attack helicopter.

Mr. Aitken: When appropriate, I have discussed our current plans for the acquisition of the attack helicopter with colleagues and officials. The assessment of the bids received last November in reply to the attack helicopter invitation to tender is currently under way and detailed consultations would not be appropriate at this stage.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many, and what percentage of officers in each of grades 1 to 7 and overall, in his Department are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities and (c) disabled, respectively.

Mr. Aitken: The number of women, disabled and ethnic minority staff in grade levels 1 to 7, and overall, are given in the table. These figures exclude casual staff and our executive agencies, the Defence Research Agency and the Meteorological Office. I have asked the chief executives to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Only those registered as disabled are included in line (c).

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Greville Janner, dated 12 April 1994:

In his written reply to your Parliamentary Question on the numbers of women, people from ethnic minorities and disabled people working in MOD, the Secretary of State for Defence informed you that I would be replying directly to you in respect of the Defence Research Agency. The information you request is as follows:

Grade	Registered disabled[1]	Percentage of staff in grade	Non-registered disabled[1]	Percentage of staff in grade	Ethnic minority[2]	Percentage of staff in grade	Women	Percentage of staff in grade

Nuclear Test Victims

29. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met ex-British service personnel nuclear test victims to discuss compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I met nuclear test veteran representatives on 17 January 1994. My Department would consider compensation for any British test veteran whose death or illness had been caused by radiation from the atmospheric nuclear tests. The report of the National Radiological Protection Board published in December 1993 did not however find any overall excess of death or malignant disease among test veterans, and concluded that participation in the nuclear test programme has had no effect on life expectancy or on the risk of developing cancer or other fatal diseases.

Defence Staff, Washington

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 571, if he will place in the Library a detailed breakdown by grade and function of the support staff to the British defence staff, Washington; and if he will give details of posts lost since April 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Belize

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when 2 Gurkha Rifles will leave Belize; and where the battalion will be based when this regiment withdraws from Belize.

Mr. Hanley: 2 Gurkha Rifles completed its tour in Belize at the end of March 1994 as originally planned. The battalion has returned to Cassino Lines Hong Kong and will merge in June-July 1994 with 6 Gurkha Rifles to form 1 Royal Gurkha Rifles.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he is making to maintain helicopter support from the Army Air Corps and the Royal Air Force for the jungle warfare training which will continue to be conducted by British Army units in Belize.

Mr. Hanley: The three Army Air Corps Gazelle helicopters currently in Belize will be used in support of the jungle training of British Army units when the British Army training support unit is established on 1 October 1994.

Anti-tank Helicopter

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent invitation to tender for the British Army anti-tank helicopter requirement was extended to the South African Atlas Denel corporation and the involvement of Her Majesty's Treasury; and what effect he expects this to have on the date of final selection.

Mr. Aitken: Atlas Aviation, part of the Denel Corporation, submitted an unsolicited bid last November in response to my Department's invitation to tender for the Attack Helicopter. After preliminary assessment, and discussions with the company, it was decided that it should have access to the invitation to tender to allow them to put its bid on the same footing as the five solicited bids. This was a matter for MOD and Her Majesty's Treasury was not involved. Steps have been taken to minimise the effect on programme timescales, including strict conditions on the timing and quality of the Denel-Atlas bid. The impact on the date of final selection should be minimal.

Export Licences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in what way, and at what time, the fact that items exported to Saudi Arabia as part of the Al Yamamah agreements were not subject to export licence controls was made known to Parliament;

(2) in what way, and at what time, the fact that items exported by Royal Ordnance as part of Defence Sales Export Organisation deals were not subject to export licence controls since 1981 was made known to Parliament.

Mr. Aitken: The fact that the Crown cannot licence itself is self-evident.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government of Saudi Arabia were made aware that items exported to that country as part of the Al Yamamah agreements would not be subject to export licence controls.

Mr. Aitken: The Government of Saudi Arabia are aware that defence equipment supplied under the Al Yamamah arrangement is subject to the normal foreign policy and defence criteria.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the items covered by the Al Yamamah contracts were subsequently exported.

Mr. Aitken: All the items covered by the Al Yamamah contracts have been or will be exported.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he maintains stocks of anthrax vaccine, including penicillin-resistant anthrax vaccines.

Mr. Hanley: Details relating to all vaccines giving protection against biological warfare agents are classified.

Ferranti International plc

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether new orders have been placed by his Department with Ferranti International plc since it went into receivership.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Defence Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the countries of destination of items sold by Royal Ordnance as part of the Defence Sales Export Organisation's contracts with Crown status since 1981.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our policy to provide details of defence exports.

Housing Trust

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of reference and the funding provision for his Department's housing trust.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Household Division Officers

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers in the Household Division received their secondary education in the public sector.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give as a percentage defence expenditure compared to gross domestic product for the period 1979 to 1983 and for the period 1989 to 1993; and if he will make a statement on the implications for the long-term defence of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Defence expenditure as a percentage of GDP

	Percent
1977-78	4·6
1978-79	4·5
1979-80	4·6
1980-81	4·9
1981-82	5·0
1982-83	5·2
1983-84	5·2
1989-90	4·0

	Percent
1990-91	4·0
1991-92	4·2
1992-93	3·9
1993-94	(forecast) 3·7

Notes:

1. Figures include exceptional expenditure on Falklands/Gulf conflict but exclude Gulf burdensharing contributions from other Governments

2. Figures from 1978-79 take account of the technical changes in the treatment of Armed Forces and civilian pensions.

The Government does not consider any fixed percentage of GDP as being appropriate for defence expenditure. As we demonstrated in "Defending Our Future" the 1993 Statement on the Defence Estimates, defence spending is set at a level which balances commitments, capabilities and the availability of resources.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 132, what action he has taken to reconsider evidence in relation to the alleged destruction of marsh Arab settlements, since the film of aerial observation of Iraq was shown by his Department to the hon. Member for Linlithgow.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest information about the scale of Iraqi Government military action in southern Iraq; and what response he is making.

Mr. Hanley: We are monitoring the situation closely with our coalition allies, taking account of new information as it becomes available. We believe that the evidence shows that the systematic destruction of the settlements and habitat of the marsh Arabs is continuing, in contravention of United Nations Security Council resolution 688.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which commercial bodies or organisations representing commercial interests have had use of the royal yacht since 1990; on what grounds; on whose authority; and at what cost.

Mr. Hanley: Since 1990 the royal yacht has been used by commercial bodies and by non-governmental bodies representing commercial interests by, singly or jointly, the following organisations:

British Gas
British Invisibles
General Council of British Shipping
Indo-British Partnership Initiative
London Forum
London First
Scottish Financial Enterprise
Scotch Whisky Industry

The royal yacht may be used to promote British exports and attract inward investment to the United Kingdom, on the authority of Buckingham palace and the Cabinet Secretary. All additional costs were paid for by the organisations concerned.

Service Children's Education

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about action the Service Children's Education Association intends to take regarding critical HMI/Ofsted reports on private and independent schools benefiting from the service children's boarding school allowance scheme.

Mr. Hanley: The Service Children's Education Authority will send copies of HMI/Ofsted reports to parents with children at the schools concerned.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many pupils at private and independent schools are benefiting from the service children's boarding school allowance;

(2) how much the service children's boarding school allowance scheme has cost his Department in 1993-94; and if he will give his estimate for 1994-95;

(3) if he will list the amount of money being spent by his Department under the service children's boarding school allowances scheme and each of the private and independent schools benefiting from the scheme;

(4) if he will list the names and location of the private and independent schools receiving moneys from the service children's boarding school allowance.

Mr. Hanley: For the spring term 1994, boarding school allowance—BSA was claimed in respect of a total of 13,608 service children. Some of these attend schools in the state sector and numbers of just those attending private and independent schools could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure on BSA for the financial year 1993-94 is currently estimated at £133,360,000. It is not possible to provide an estimate for financial year 1994-95 at this stage as total expenditure will reflect both the rate of BSA and the total number of children in respect of whom it is claimed. A list of schools attended by the children of BSA claimants is not compiled annually. I am arranging, however, for a copy of the most recent version which was compiled in 1992, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Service Children's Education Association to send to parents of the children at Finborough, Rodney and Lime House schools the recent HMI/Ofsted reports on that school.

Mr. Hanley: I expect the Service Children's Education Authority to send the reports on Finborough and Lime House schools to parents before the end of April. It is not intended to distribute the report on Rodney school which relates to an inspection that took place in 1991, and is regarded by the Department of Education as being out of date.

Defence Land Agency

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the circumstances which led to the arrest of Charles Ellis and Roger Pannell from the Defence Land Agency, by his Department's police; and on what date the arrest took place.

Mr. Hanley: I confirm that the Ministry of Defence police are investigating certain activities concerning disposal of MOD property in south-west England. Several arrests were made in August and September 1993 but as yet no charges have been laid. An MOD employee has been suspended from duty while inquiries continue. As the MOD police have yet to complete their investigation it would be inappropriate to comment further at this stage.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright) of 31 January, Official Report, column 551, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken in each of the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested can be provided only for the last two years; information for earlier years is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I will write accordingly to the hon. Member in the near future.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information technology consultants his Department has employed; and for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: My Department does not centrally maintain the details sought on information technology consultants; the answer to this question could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Jordan

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total gross value of exports to Jordan under successive memoranda of understanding regarding Government to Government special export deals.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to give the value of orders placed under such Government agreements.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many main battle tanks formed part of the exports to the Kingdom of Jordan under the memorandum of understanding arms export deals with the Kingdom of Jordan.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the established practice of successive Governments not to release information about individual defence exports.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if 155 mm shells were exported under the memorandum of understanding with the Kingdom of Jordan.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to comment on detailed matters concerning individual defence exports. However, certain information about the contracts placed under the Jordan defence package has been made public during oral evidence given to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. Exceptionally, therefore, I can provide the information the hon. Gentleman requests. No 155 mm shells were exported under the memorandum of understanding with Jordan.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantity of artillery fuses and propellant were exported under the memorandum of understanding on arms export deals with the Kingdom of Jordan.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to comment on detailed matters concerning individual defence exports. However, certain information about the contracts placed under the Jordan defence package has been made public during oral evidence given to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. Exceptionally, therefore, I can provide the information the hon. Gentleman requests. No artillery fuses were exported under the memorandum of understanding with Jordan.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff or employees of International Military Services Ltd. have been transferred to other companies.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the company.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which contracts formerly held by International Military Services Ltd. have been sold, disposed of, or transferred, to other companies.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the company.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received that arms or arms related exports by International Military Services Ltd. or the Defence Export Sales Organisation have been passed to countries or destinations other than the stated end-user.

Mr. Aitken: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on the existence of any such reports.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which assets formerly held by International Military Services Ltd. have been sold, disposed of, or transferred to, other British companies.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the company. All shares in IMS Ltd. remain the property of the Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the affairs of International Military Services Ltd. were subject to scrutiny by the defence internal audit teams.

Mr. Aitken: No. Its accounts are audited by Price Waterhouse which is appointed on an annual basis. The National Audit Office has access to the books and records of the company.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which years since 1981 the global provision for statutory liabilities in respect of IMS Ltd. was drawn down; and in respect of what sums.

Mr. Aitken: There has been no such draw down.

Anti-tank Missiles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he placed the most recent orders for anti-tank missiles; and what studies are being undertaken into the design, availability and performance of future anti-tank missiles.

Mr. Aitken: The most recent orders for anti-tank guided missiles were placed as follows:

SWINGFIRE final follow-on order; contract placed November 1987. TOW OTA (Overhead Top Attack) modified missiles; contract placed October 1987.

The United Kingdom continues to participate in the development of third generation anti-tank guided missile programmes—both medium range and long range—known as TRIGAT, in collaboration with European partners. Proposals for the United Kingdom's future attack helicopter are being evaluated which include a long-range anti-tank missile system. In addition, studies are being undertaken into future technologies for anti-tank missiles beyond the turn of the century.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the benefits or privileges extended to arms or arms related exports as a result of Crown status.

Mr. Aitken: Arms or arms related exports having Crown status are all subject to exactly the same foreign and defence policy considerations as exports carried out under an export licence.

Defence Sales

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 470, whether Royal Ordnance or Defence Export Services Organisation were asked to supply information as to end-users in respect of arms or arms-related exports having Crown status.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what computer systems his Department have brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case if the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Aitken: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministers in his Department were approached to sign public interest immunity certificates in connection with the Matrix Churchill trial and declined to do so.

Mr. Aitken: No Minister in my Department has declined to sign a public interest immunity certificate in connection with the Matrix Churchill trial.

Polaris Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what method his Department will dispose of the propellant inside Polaris missiles when they are scrapped.

Mr. Aitken: Propellant contained within surplus Polaris components is already being disposed of, by burning, in an environmentally safe manner.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments have been made in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) West Yorkshire and (d) Humberside since October 1993.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what are the estimated costs to his Department of abolishing the qualifying benefit rules for disability working allowance.

Mr. Hague: This information is not readily available. The cost would depend on the nature of any alternative qualifying test, the way in which any such test was applied, the number of people who decide to take up work or change their pattern of work, and the levels of earnings and other income.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability working allowance claims have been disallowed for reasons of income higher than the appropriate level; how many of these claims had weekly incomes above this level of (i) up to £1, (ii) between £1 and £2, (iii) between £2 and £5, (iv) between £5 and £10, (v) between £10 and £15 and between £15 and £20.

Mr. Hague: Since March 1992, 3,371 claims have been disallowed because income is in excess of the appropriate level.

The remaining information is not available in the form requested.

Family Credit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of those couples in Scotland who were in receipt of family credit in 1993-94, received family credit for (a) 26 weeks only, (b) 52 weeks only and (c) more than 52 weeks;

(2) what percentage of those lone parents in Scotland who were in receipt of family credit in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94, received family credit for (i) 26 weeks only, (ii) 52 weeks only and (iii) more than 52 weeks;

(3) what percentage of those couples in Scotland who were in receipt of family credit in 1992-93, received family credit for (a) 26 weeks only, (b) 52 weeks only and (c) more than 52 weeks.

Mr. Hague: The information requested for 1992-93 is in the table. The figures for 1993-94 are not available.

Awards of family credit in Scotland for 1992-93, broken down by family type and the percentage who received family credit for (a) 26 weeks only, (b) 52 weeks only and (c) more than 52 weeks.

Number of weeks	Couples Per cent.	Lone parents Per cent.
26 weeks only	60·57	51.19
52 weeks only	27·11	32.64
More than 52 weeks	12·32	16·17
TOTAL	100	100

Notes:

1. The figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of family credit recipients as at 1992-93.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many and what percentage of all Scottish children aged (a) under five years and (b) five to 15 years from two-parent families were in families which were in receipt of family credit in (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94;

(2) how many and what percentage of all Scottish children aged (a) under five years and (b) five to 15 years from lone-parent families in Scotland were in families which were in receipt of family credit in (i) 1992-93 and (ii) 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: The information for 1992 is in the table. Figures for 1993-94 are not available.

Children in Scotland in families in receipt of family credit[1]

	Two parent families	One parent families	All families
Number
Aged under 5 years	16,260	8,940	25,200
Aged 5 to 15 years	34,220	30,320	64,540
Percentage
Aged under 5 years	6·0	16·8	7·7
Aged 5 to 15 years	5·7	29·4	9·2
Total children in Scotland[2]
Aged under 5 years	273,147	53,194	326,341
Aged 5 to 15 years	595,818	103,253	699,071

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many couples in Scotland claimed family credit in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94;

(2) how many lone parents in Scotland claimed family credit in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available. Information on the number of recipients of family credit in 1992 and 1993 is in the table.

Number of Family Credit cases in Scotland

	Two parent families	One parent families	All families
May 1992	21,860	25,100	46,960
May 1993	24,660	32,180	56,840

Notes:

These figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of family credit recipients as at May 1992 and May 1993. Information on claims is not available.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the take-up rate by women claiming family credit enhanced payments of £28 for the purpose of child care payments in respect of working mothers.

Mr. Hague: We expect that the take-up rate of those eligible for the maximum help with child care costs of £28 a week in family credit will be virtually 100 per cent.

Pensioners (Fuel Bills)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will tabulate the financial assistance available to each category of retirement pensioner in respect of value added tax on fuel bills.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Category of pension	Weekly amount of extra help towards VAT on fuel[1] £
A	0·50
B	0·50
B (lower rate)	0·20
C	0·20
D	0·20

[1] Relates to standard rates of pension.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new applications for invalidity benefit have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful in the Doncaster district in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Hague: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the transitional arrangements for people who are receiving invalidity benefit will also apply to people who do not receive benefit but have an underlying entitlement to invalidity benefit at the point of change.

Mr. Hague: There will be transitional arrangements for those people entitled to invalidity benefit when it is replaced by incapacity benefit in April 1995. The arrangements will apply to people entitled to, but not receiving, invalidity benefit at the point of change.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the Acts of Parliament and Consolidation Acts affecting local government that have been introduced by his Department since 1990.

Mr. Hague: The following Acts of Parliament affect local authorities either as employers or as administrators of social security benefits:

Social Security Act 1990
Social Security (Contributions) Act 1991
Statutory Sick Pay Act 1991
The Social Security and Benefits Act 1992[1]
The Social Security Administration Act 1992[1]
Disability (Grants) Act 1993
Social Security Act 1993
Pension Schemes Act 1993[1]
Statutory Sick Pay Act 1994
Social Security (Contributions) Act 1994

[1]These Acts were Consolidated Acts and were handled by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated costs to his Department of bringing forward entitlement to long-term incapacity benefit to the first day of incapacity for people who are terminally ill.

Mr. Hague: We estimate that this would cost around £3 million per annum.

Notes:

Estimate expressed in 1993-94 prices, and net of offsetting changes in income related benefit expenditure.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he intends to take to ensure appropriate assessment of the needs of people with mental illness who may be eligible for incapacity benefit.

Mr. Hague: We are seeking the advice of a number of experts in mental illness in designing the new, more objective medical test as it relates to the particular problems of people with mental illness. The proposed arrangements will be evaluated over the summer. When the new test is applied to a person with a diagnosis of mental illness, information and advice will be sought from the claimant's doctors. This will include the claimant's psychiatrist, if one is involved in the case.

Claimant Families

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of claimant families in Scotland in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available in the precise form requested as it is only available on a regional basis for certain benefits. Information on benefit recipients for 1993 is not yet available for some benefits. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Further information on the numbers claiming social security benefits for Great Britain as a whole can be found in the Social Security Departmental Report, Cm 2513, a copy of which is in the Library.

Benefit	Number to nearest thousand	Year ending
(a) 1992-93
Child benefit	619,000	December 1992
Community charge benefit	142,000	May 1992

Retirement pension	1,000	March 1993
Widows benefit	7,000	March 1993

[1] Exact figures.
[2] Annual enquiry.
[3] Quarterly enquiry.

Notes:

1. Claimant families have been interpreted as families with dependent children.
2. Housing benefit and community charge benefit recipients may receive other benefits. Families include dependents under age 17.
3. Income support families include dependents under age 19.
4. Invalidity benefit and severe disablement benefit only include families with child dependency increase in payment.

Asylum Seekers

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to the Exchequer of giving social security and benefits and other benefits to those who are also seeking political asylum.

Mr. Hague: The estimated annual cost of paying income support to asylum seekers is £102 million. Records are not held on their claims to other benefits.

Source: Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, May 1993.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants there are currently seeking political asylum; and how many are also successfully claiming social security.

Mr. Hague: At the end of February 1994 the estimated number of applications for asylum outstanding was 47,100.[1] The number of asylum seekers claiming income support was 37,000 in May 1993, the latest month for which statistics are available.[2]

Pensioner Households

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the number of households containing both individuals of pensionable age and other individuals not of pensionable age.

Mr. Hague: In 1990-91—the latest year for which information is available—an estimated 680,000 households contained both persons over pension age and persons under pension age.

This estimate derives from the 1990-91 family expenditure survey.

Social Fund

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the exclusion from payments by the social fund with respect to medical, surgical, optical, oral or dental items.

Mr. Hague: The social fund does not provide for these items which are primarily the responsibility of the national health service. There are no plans to review the current arrangements.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over the age of 60 years receive (a) the higher rate and (b) the lower rate mobility component of the disability living allowance; and what is the latest estimate of the number of people aged over 60 years entitled to claim the mobility component of disability living allowance who do not do so.

Mr. Hague: The numbers of people over the age of 60 years who receive the higher and lower rate mobility components of disability living allowance are 424,000 and 19,000 respectively.

Information is not available on the number of people aged over 60 who are entitled to claim the mobility component of disability living allowance but do not do so.

Note:

Source: DSS Analytical Services Division. Based on a 5 per cent. extract of payload at 30 November 1993.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of people over the age of 60 in receipt of the higher rate mobility component of disability living allowance use it under the motability scheme towards the cost of hiring or buying a car.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Expenditure

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what year rate rebates, community charge benefit and statutory sick pay started to be counted as part of the public DSS departmental expenditure.

Mr. Hague: Expenditure on rate rebates, community charge benefit and statutory sick pay have been included in DSS departmental expenditure figures since 1982-83, 1989-90 and 1990-91 respectively.

Pensioners' Income

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioner couples receive income of at least (a) £30 and (b) £89·90 a week from (i) an occupational pension, (ii) income from savings and (iii) both occupational pension and income from savings.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table:

Income	£30 or more Per cent.	£89·90 or more Per cent.
Occupational pension	42	20
Income from savings	31	13
Occupational pension and income from savings	58	33

Note:

Estimates are based on data drawn from the Family Expenditure Survey for 1990-91 and the Government Actuary's Department's Survey of Occupational Pension Schemes.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of recently retired single pensioners receive income of at least (a) £20 and (b) £56·10 a week from (i) an occupational pension, (ii) income from savings and (iii) both occupational pension and income from savings.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table:

Income	£20 or more Per cent.	£56·10 or more Per cent.
Occupational pension	42	18
Income from savings	27	14
Occupational pension and income from savings	57	34

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on data drawn from the Family Expenditure Survey for 1990-91 and the Government Actuary's Department's Survey of Occupational Pension Schemes.
2. Recently retired single pensioners are defined as women aged 60-64 and men aged 65-69.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of single pensioners receive income of at least (a) £20 and (b) £56·10 a week from (i) an occupational pension, (ii) income from savings and (iii) both occupational pension and income from savings.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table:

Income	£20 or more Per cent.	£56.10 or more Per cent.
Occupational pension	31	13
Income from savings	21	10
Occupational pension and income from savings	46	24

Note: Estimates are based on data drawn from the Family Expenditure Survey for 1990-91 and the Government Actuary's Department's Survey of Occupational Pension Schemes.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of recently retired pensioner couples receive income of at least (a) £30 and (b) £89·90 a week from (i) an occupational pension, (ii) income from savings and (iii) both occupational pension and income from savings.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table:

Income	£30 or more Per cent.	£89·90 or more Per cent.
Occupational pension	47	23
Income from savings	35	14
Occupational pension and income from savings	63	37

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on data drawn from the Family Expenditure Survey for 1990-91 and the Government Actuary's Department's Survey of Occupational Pension Schemes.
2. Recently retired pensioner couples are defined as those in which the husband is aged 65-69.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the proportion of pensioners receiving income from savings identified as (a) all pensioners, (b) single male pensioners aged under 75 years, (c) single female pensioners aged under 75 years, (d) pensioner couples aged under 75 years, (e) single female pensioners aged 75 years or over, (f) single male pensioners aged 75 years or over and (g) couples where at least one partner is aged 75 years or over, and the median amount received.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table:

Pensioner group	Proportion receiving income from savings	Median weekly amount received by those in receipt
	percentage	£
(a) all pensioners	75	9·00
(b) single male pensioners under 75	69	13·50
(c) single female pensioners under 75	71	5·10
(d) pensioner couples under 75	83	11·20
(e) single female pensioners, 75 or more	71	4·70
(f) single male pensioners, 75 or more	75	9·60
(g) couples where at least one is 75 or more	84	9·20

Notes:

1. These estimates derive from the Family Expenditure Survey for 1990-91. The amounts are at January 1991 prices.
2. Pensioner couples are those where the husband is over state pension age.

Rent Rebates

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest proportion of total expenditure on rent rebates, in percentage and cash terms, paid to tenants with weekly rents of (i) £20 and under, (ii) up to £30, (iii) up to £40, (iv) up to £50, (v) up to £60, (vi) up to £70 and (vii) £70 and over.

Mr. Hague: The latest available information is in the table.

Rent rebate ranges of eligible rent (£ per week) May 1992[1]	Proportion of housing benefit expenditure
	Per cent.
[2]50p-£20	4
£20·01-£30	41
£30·01-£40	34
£40·01-£50	11
£50·01-£60	5

Data source: The housing benefit management information system annual 1 per cent sample of May 1992.

Notes:

1. Details of rent paid are not available, therefore, the information relates to the amount of rent eligible for housing benefit.
2. Housing benefit is not payable below 50 pence per week.
3. The percentages cannot be correctly applied to expenditure figures to produce cash amounts.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 334, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

Mr. Hague: I have arranged for such information as is available to be placed in the Library.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what computer systems his Department has brought in for what function, and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Hague: The Department meets its information technology requirements through the services of the Information Technology Services Agency.

The key systems brought in during the last five years were delivered under the framework of the operational strategy. The cost of individual operations cannot be accurately disaggregated.

Information on the work carried out by ITSA is available in its business plans which are held in the Library.

Savings Disregard

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) of 14 March, Official Report, column 479, if he will now raise the savings disregard to £4,000.

Mr. Hague: The level of the capital disregard is kept under review, but there are no current plans to increase it.

Turker Ahmet

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford will receive a reply to her letter of 7 March concerning Turker Ahmet.

Mr. Hague: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 8 April.

"The Growth of Social Security"

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will recalculate table 2 of "The Growth of Social Security", excluding rate rebates and community charge benefit, and including the cost of child tax allowances in 1978 to 1989.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table.

Annual average real growth rates in benefit expenditure[1] 1978-79 to 1992-93

	1978-79 to 1992-93	1978-79 to 1983-84	1983-84 to 1986-87	1986-87 to 1989-90	1989-90 to 1992-93
Total benefit expenditure	3·5	4·8	3·5	-2·3	7·6
Contributory	1·6	2·2	2·3	-1·9	3·5
Non-contributory	6·4	9·3	5·2	-3·0	12·8

[1] Based on table 2 in "The Growth of Social Security" excluding rate rebates and community charge benefit, and including the cost of child tax allowances.

Service Pay

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the Child Support Agency justifies including the X factor in service pay when assessing serving personnel.

Mr. Hague: The X factor forms part of the basic pay for all members of the armed forces, irrespective of rank or location. The Child Support Act 1991 defines earnings as any remuneration or profit received from employment, including any bonus, commission, royalty or fee. This clearly includes the X factor, which is, therefore, taken fully into account in the calculation.

Income Support

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients in each age group will become eligible for top-up payments to bring them up to the income support level after 11 April; and what will be the cost to public funds.

Mr. Hague: As income support is an income-related benefit, which provides financial help to people who are not in full-time work to bring their income up to a level prescribed by Parliament, it is often paid to top up other income received by claimants. More than half those claiming income support have other income—such as benefits, maintenance, part-time earnings, notional income from capital—taken into account when assessing their entitlement to benefit.

The most recent information that is available is in the table. Only the recipient's income has been used to produce the table. Income from partners or dependants has not been counted.

Income support recipients average IS by age
Recipients with other income brought to account

Age of recipient	Number of cases	Total weekly IS (£)	Average weekly IS (£)
16-19	52,000	2,800,000	52·77
20-29	523,000	35,600,000	67·97
30-39	462,000	36,900,000	80·00

70-79	505,000	15,000,000	29·74
80 and above	676,000	37,000,000	54·75
All cases	2,871,000	165,100,000	57·52

Notes:
1. Numbers of cases have been rounded to the nearest thousand, total IS amounts to the nearest hundred thousand pounds. Average amounts of IS are correct to the nearest penny.
2. Figures may not sum to the totals given due to rounding.
3. An IS recipient may have a partner's or dependent's income taken into account in the assessment. Such income has not been used in compiling the table above; only the recipient's income has been counted.
4. Source: Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, May 1993.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support who were studying less than 21 hours per week had benefit withdrawn under (a) availability for work criteria or (b) actively seeking work criteria in the latest year for which he has information; and how many such students had benefit restored after appeal.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Rents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of expenditure on rent allowances, in percentage and cash terms, was paid to tenants with weekly rents of (a) £20 and under, (b) up to £30, (c) up to £40, (d) up to £50, (e) up to £60, (f) up to £70, (g) up to £80, (h) up to £90, (i) up to £100 and (j) £100 and over.

Mr. Hague: The latest available information is in the table.

Rent allowance ranges of eligible rent (£ per week) May 1992[1]	Proportion of housing benefit expenditure Per cent.
50p to £20[2]	3
£20·01 to £30	14

2. Housing benefit is not payable below 50p per week.
3. The percentages cannot be correctly applied to expenditure figures to produce cash figures.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total sum of rents determined as reasonable for housing benefit subsidy for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The total sum of rents determined as reasonable by the rent officer service for housing benefit subsidy for the 1992-93 financial year for England and Wales is £2·245 billion.
The information in the form requested is not readily available for Scotland.
Note: Figure quoted rounded to nearest million.

Child Maintenance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account the Child Support Agency takes of the earnings of a second wife in respect of a father's maintenance payments for children of his first marriage where the second wife has young children of her own first marriage for whom she does not receive maintenance from their father.

Mr. Hague: The calculation of the amount of maintenance an absent parent is required to pay is based on his own income and essential expenditure. The assessment takes account only of a new partner's income to the extent that she is able to contribute to the costs associated with bringing up children of the new relationship, which are otherwise taken into account in full against the absent parent's allowable expenses.

The only other way the income of a new partner affects the assessment is in the calculation of protected income. This calculation looks at all of the income and outgoings of the new family to ensure that the payment of maintenance does not reduce their resources below a prescribed level.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to require the Child Support Agency to take account of child-minding fees when assessing maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Under the formula which the agency uses to calculate maintenance, the basic maintenance level for children already includes an amount to recognise their need to be cared for by an adult. This amount depends on the age of the youngest child to be maintained and reduces as that child grows older.

There is no specific allowances for child-minding fees against the income of an absent parent who is bringing up children, but the formula is designed to ensure that all absent parents keep a substantial proportion of their net income after paying maintenance so that they can meet essential expenditure.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what legal advice has been obtained concerning proposals to introduce regulations applying an habitual residence test to the payment of benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The Department's legal advisers have been consulted on the proposals.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the amount of money spent on social security per thousand of population and the total amount spent on social security in the United Kingdom and in each of the other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 21 March 1994]: The table provides information for selected OECD countries and the United Kingdom on the amount of money spent on social protection per thousand of population and the total amount spent on social protection. It is customary to use social protection, which includes public health care costs, personal social services and compulsory occupational pensions as well as social security for international comparisons.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ritchie Report

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 888, if he will implement the recommendations of the Ritchie report to standardise the documentation covered by section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Maclean: As stated in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 18 March, this recommendation is under consideration.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 737, if he will make a statement on the automatic redundancy entitlement of DTELS staff who do not consent to a variance in staff severance terms; and how long is the period after the sale in which National Transcommunications has confirmed that it will not be seeking to discuss and agree changes to staff terms.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If National Transcommunications Ltd. varies or attempts to vary staff severance terms without the consent of DTELS staff, the normal legal remedies will be available to those staff. I have no further knowledge of National Transcommunication Ltd.'s intentions regarding conditions of service. This is a matter for the company and DTELS staff.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the Acts of Parliament and Consolidation Acts affecting local government that have been introduced by his Department since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following Acts of Parliament that have an effect on local government have been introduced by the Department since 1990. The list also includes consolidation Acts in respect of which the Department has responsibility.

Criminal Justice Act 1991 (c.53)
Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 (c.65)
Charities Act 1992 (c.41)
[1]Charities Act 1993 (c.10)
Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 (c.23)
[1]Probation Service Act 1993 (c.47)

[1]Consolidation Acts

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what structures have been put in place to ensure effective monitoring of the implementation of section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and what information is available to show the outcome of its first year of operation.

Mr. Maclean: Section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 came into effect in October 1991. The matters with which it is concerned are kept under regular review by officials in my Department, assisted and advised by officials from the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Crown Prosecution Service. Separate publications dealing with race and gender issues were widely distributed in September 1992; and a booklet about costs received a similar distribution in January 1993. Additional material on race, prepared specifically for the Judicial Studies Board, was also published in 1993. Further information about race will be published shortly.

Bail Hostels

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of places available in bail hostels; and what will be the number in 12 months' time.

Mr. Maclean: On 1 April, there was a total of 2,597 available places in approved bail and probation-bail hostels in England and Wales. Included in this figure are a number of approved hostel places scheduled for closure. The currently projected total of available places on 1 April 1995 is 2,560.

Remand Prisoners

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated number of remand prisoners who have been awaiting trial (a) for more than three months, (b) for more than six months, (c) for more than 12 months and (d) for more than 18 months.

Mr. Maclean: The latest available provisional data are for 31 December 1993 and are in the table.

Inmates recorded as being untried held in custody on 31st December 1993 by time on remand

	Number
For over 3 months up to and including 6 months	1,960
For over 6 months up to and including 12 months	1,020
For over 12 months up to and including 18 months	170
For over 18 months	190

Not all these defendants will have been in continuous prison custody since their first remand. This period excludes any time spent in non-Prison Service establishments—for example, police cells—before reception on remand into a Prison Service establishment; it includes inmates who are awaiting trial and those being tried.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners were being held in police cells on the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of remand prisoners being held in police cells.

On 5 April 1994, the latest date for which complete information is available, 274 remand prisoners were held in police cells.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the ethnic composition of the remand population in prison at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 13 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking what was the ethnic composition of the remand population in prison at the latest available date.

The latest available information is for 31 December 1993 and is given in the table. The ethnic breakdown of the remand population is based on the Census of Population ethnic coding classification which was introduced in prisons in October 1992.

Remand population in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 31 December 1993 by sex and ethnic origin[1]

[2] Including refusal.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of people remanded in custody by magistrates courts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the table. It is also published annually in chapter 8 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", a copy of which is in the Library.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proportion of persons in each police force area proceeded against at magistrates courts who are remanded on bail for (a) indictable offences and (b) summary offences.

Mr. Maclean: The data available for each police force area are not reliable enough to be able to answer this question. Information on a national basis is given in the table. These figures are published in chapter 8 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Waiting Times

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average waiting time for trial at (a) magistrates courts and (b) Crown courts for defendants granted bail and those remanded in custody.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The readily available information for magistrates courts relates to proceedings for indictable —including either-way—offences. Sample surveys during 1993 show that the average time interval from first listing to completion of such cases at magistrates courts was 7·3 weeks for defendants remanded in custody throughout proceedings and 10·1 weeks for those remanded on bail only. Provisional figures for the Crown court show that the average time interval from committal for trial to start of hearing for cases disposed of during 1993 was 12·6 weeks for those remanded in custody and 16·7 weeks for those remanded on bail.

TREASURY

Taxpayers (Earnings)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers in (a) Lancashire and (b) the United Kingdom earn £64,000 or more a year.

Mr. Dorrell: There were estimated to be about 4,000 taxpayers resident in Lancashire and 260,000 taxpayers in the United Kingdom with income of £64,000 or more in 1991-92, the latest available year for which information can be provided below the United Kingdom level.

Pension Contributions (Tax Relief)

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield from providing tax relief for pension contributions of higher-rate taxpayers at the basic rate only.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that the full-year yield might be about £520 million at 1993-94 levels. This takes no account of possible behavioural effects following such a change.

Income Statistics

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the equivalised disposable income, at 1992 prices, at the bottom, second and top decile groups, ranked by equivalised disposable income, in conformity with tables 3 and 7 of "Economic Trends" No. 483 for 1992 for (a) all households and (b) non-retired households with children for (i) 1979 and (ii) 1986.

Mr. Nelson: The figures are available only at current prices. Those given in the table, and those for later years, are not strictly comparable over time because of changes in classification of both income and taxation and because of changes in the family expenditure survey.

Average equivalised disposable income by decile groups of all households in the family expenditure survey, ranked by equivalised disposable income of all households using the McClements equivalence scale with a household of a married couple = 1

Decile groups of equivalised disposable income	Current prices 1979 £ per year	1986 £ per year
Bottom	1,689	3,094
2nd	2,179	4,065
Top	8,664	20,229

Average equivalised disposable income by decile groups of non-retired households with children ranked by equivalised disposable income of non-retired households with children using the McClements equivalence scale with a household of a married couple = 1

Decile groups of equivalised disposable income	Current prices 1979 £ per year	1986 £ per year
Bottom	1,819	2,991
2nd	2,474	3,990
Top	7,706	17,062

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts currently being worked on for his Department by Coopers and Lybrand, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse, KPMG Peat Marwick, Grant Thornton, Robson Rhodes, Levy Gee, BDO Binder Hamlyn, Hacker Young, Pannell Kerr Forster and Stoy Hayward.

Mr. Nelson: The table lists relevant companies currently working on contracts for HM Treasury, together with the type of consulting work for each company.

Company and type of consultancy work
Coopers and Lybrand—Market Testing
Ernst and Young—Privatisation
Price Waterhouse—Management Consultancy, Privatisation, Auditing
KPMG Peat Marwick—Management Consultancy
BDO Binder Hamlyn—Auditing

Uganda

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total aggregate indebtedness of Uganda to the United Kingdom, by way of outstanding bilateral loans; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards easing the burden of this debt.

Mr. Nelson: Uganda's outstanding debts to the United Kingdom total £25·5 million, all of which are in respect of business insured by the Export Credits Guarantee Department. All outstanding debts to the Overseas Development Administration were written off in 1981 under the provisions of retrospective terms agreement.

On 17 June 1992, Uganda rescheduled its official bilateral debts to Paris club creditors under a concessional, Trinidad terms agreement. This involved writing down by 50 per cent. the maturities falling due over the period of Uganda's International Monetary Fund programme. It also included a commitment by creditors to consider action on the whole of Uganda's official bilateral debt stock in three years' time, subject to Uganda maintaining a good debt servicing record and a satisfactory performance under an IMF programme.

The United Kingdom is pressing the other Paris club creditors to improve the existing Trinidad terms. In particular, we should like the Paris club to increase the rate of debt reduction above 50 per cent. and to offer immediate stock of debt reductions for countries with a good track record of debt servicing and economic reform.

Bank of England Governor

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish minutes of his monthly monetary meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. I agree with the recommendation by the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee that I should publish, with a lag, minutes of my monthly monetary meetings with the Governor. I believe that greater transparency has helped the operation of monetary policy and increased accountability.

I am, therefore, publishing today the minutes of the meetings held in January, February and the beginning of March. Thereafter, the minutes of each meeting will be published around two weeks after the subsequent meeting has taken place. I have arranged for copies of the minutes to be placed in the Library of the House.

I am confident that the minutes of these and future meetings will confirm the Government's commitment to sustained low inflation and sound monetary policy.

Manufacturing, Midlands

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for manufacturing output in (a) the west midlands and (b) Coventry.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of gross value added in manufacturing for the west midlands and Coventry are set out in the table. The latest available figures are for 1991.

Gross value added in manufacturing—1991

Area	Gross value added £ million
West midlands	6,585·2
Coventry	1,311·4

Source: Annual census of production.

Information on published back data is available from table 15.3 of "Regional Trends", copies of which are available from the House of Commons Library. This information can also be obtained from the central shared data bank.

Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the effect of pre-payment by large-scale gas and electricity users to avoid value added tax on domestic fuel from 1 April; and what assessment he has made of the scale of pre-payment and its effect on (i) the revenue expected from the tax and (ii) the level of savings held in building societies.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 12 April 1994]: It is estimated that about 5 per cent. of domestic electricity consumers and about 4 per cent. of domestic gas consumers paid fuel bills in advance of the imposition of VAT on 1 April. No breakdown of the figures by size of user is possible. The effect of these prepayments on the revenue yield is estimated to be small in comparison with the yield from VAT on domestic fuel and power. It is not possible to quantify the effect of these prepayments on the level of savings in building societies.

ENVIRONMENT

European Funding

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under which schemes local authorities have received European funding since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The principal sources of EC funding that local authorities may receive are the European structural funds. Prior to 1989, applications for European regional development fund assistance for specific projects were submitted to the European Commission for approval. Since 1989, projects have been considered at regional level under Community support frameworks, agreed between the member state and the European Commission, for areas eligible under structural fund objectives 1, 2 and 5(b). Local authorities have also been able to apply for European social fund projects under objectives 3 and 4. Other funding from the structural funds has been available to local authorities through Community initiatives of which there have been a total of 14 in the period 1989-93. Examples of these initiatives are Rechar for coalfield areas and Interreg for cross-border areas. New Community support frameworks, and European Commission proposals for Community initiatives, for the period 1994-99 are in the process of being established.

Local authorities have also been able to obtain grants or loans or other awards from various other European sources. My Department does not have records of funding that may have been received in this way.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total staff complement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; how many of these are inspectors with responsibility for integrated pollution control enforcement at site level; how many site visits have been made to part A prescribed processes in 1991, 1992 and 1993; and what targets have been set for IPC inspection staff, enforcement activity and site visits for 1994 and 1995.

Mr. Atkins: As at 1 April 1994, the total staff complement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was 434·5. At that date, there were 122 complemented inspector posts with responsibility for integrated pollution control enforcement at site level. Data on site visits are kept by financial year. In 1991-92, there were 1,205 site visits to part A prescribed processes regulated under integrated pollution control—IPC; in 1992-93, there were 3,364 visits and in 1993-94—in the period to end of December 1993—there were 3,495 visits.

The target is to maintain the complement for IPC inspection staff in 1994-95 at 122 posts. Enforcement activity is reactive, but resources will be made available for it as necessary. The target for site visits to part A prescribed processes in 1994-95 is 3,030.

The actual number of visits is expected to be greater than this number because of additional reactive visits which will be made in response to complaints and incidents as they arise.

London Docklands

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by local authority area, each London Docklands development corporation-owned site in the Docklands urban development area which is currently undeveloped.

Sir George Young: I have asked my Department to produce this information. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total spending that the London Docklands development corporation is committing to social projects in 1994-95; and if he will break this figure down into amounts to be spent on (a) training, (b) social housing, (c) Tower Hamlets accord, (d) Newham memorandum of agreement, (e) community grants and (f) health projects; and if he will make a statement on the future of the social programme.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands development corporation is proposing to spend £14,518,000 in 1994-95 on social projects. This allocation is due to be discussed formally with the Department in the corporate plan round currently under way.

The breakdown is:

Category	£ thousand
(a) Training	1,024
(b) Social housing	2,062
(c) Tower Hamlets accord	5,063
(d) Newham memorandum	2,979
(e) Community grants	2,542
(f) Health projects	303
(g) Schools and education	545

The social programme continues to be a key area of the corporation's activities in its remit to assist regeneration in the docklands.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information technology consultants his Department has employed, for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: The information technology consultants have been used for a wide variety of purposes including facilities management, research, training, risk assessment, and data administration. The total cost for each of the last four years is as follows:

Year	£
1990-91	1,427,230
1991-92	4,029,342
1992-93	2,742,459
1993-94	1,794,048

Assistance for Local Authority Leaseholders Bill

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Council of Mortgage Lenders in relation to the Assistance for Local Authority Leaseholders Bill.

Sir George Young: Ministers and officials have had a number of discussions with the Council of Mortgage Lenders about the difficulties faced by some leaseholders of local authority dwellings. We are currently consulting them and other relevant organisations about the possible revision of the standard mortgage indemnity agreement used by local authorities.

Zoos

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which EC member states have no specific legislation on zoos; and what steps he takes to ensure the welfare of animals exported from the United Kingdom to zoos in such countries.

Mr. Atkins: According to our latest information, I understand that Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain do not have specific zoo legislation.

Live animals must be transported in accordance with the International Air Transport Association's live animals regulations. The welfare of animals in zoos is a matter for individual member states.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when draft guidelines were issued by his Department in connection with possible applications for assistance under the single regeneration budget; what response he received to those draft guidelines; on what date he expects to be able to publish final guidelines; by what date initial approval for applications under the scheme must be made; and what is the final deadline for approved applications.

Mr. Baldry: Draft guidance to those with an interest in bidding for funding from the single regeneration budget for 1995-96 was issued for consultation on 14 January, with responses requested by 25 February. Ten thousand copies of the draft guidance were circulated, 11 seminars held throughout England, and several hundred written responses received. Those responding to the consultation were broadly in favour of the budget, but made a wide range of detailed points.

The final guidance, taking account of the responses to consultation, will be issued on 14 April, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House. The guidance will require applications for funding to be made to Government offices for the regions by 7 September 1994. Bidders will be encouraged to discuss their potential bids in outline with regional offices by the end of May 1994. It is intended that final decisions on the bid applications will be made known in early January 1995.

New Forest

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received opposing the granting of national park status to the New Forest.

Mr. Atkins: Between 24 September 1992, when we published our consultation paper on our proposals for the future of the New Forest, and 8 April 1994 we have received 223 letters and a petition with three signatures opposing national park status for the New Forest.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations opposing the granting of national park status to the New Forest were initially mislaid by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department did not mislay any representations opposing the granting of national park status to the New Forest.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations opposing the granting of national park status to the New Forest he has received since January; and how many of these were printed pro-forma letters recommending an enhanced role for the verderers in the management of the New Forest.

Mr. Atkins: Between 1 January 1994 and 8 April, we have received 198 letters opposing the granting of national park status to the New Forest. Of these, 181 were printed pro-forma letters recommending an enhanced role for the verderers in the management of the New Forest.

Retail Sites

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he is taking to ensure that the recent policy guidance in respect of out-of-town retail sites is not being avoided by planning application for such developments which are proposed under misleading descriptions; and if he will call in all such applications;

(2) what action he will take to prevent the further expansion of retail sites in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Baldry: Our revised planning policy guidance note 6 "Town Centres and Retail Developments" sets out clear advice on the issues that local planning authorities, including development corporations, will need to take into account when considering planning applications for retail developments. Local planning authorities have adequate powers to obtain all the necessary information to enable them to make a decision. The Secretary of State expects local planning authorities to use those powers where necessary.

Local planning authorities must notify the Secretary of State, under the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans and Consultation) Direction 1992, of any applications which involve specified departures from the development plan. They are also required to notify the Secretary of State of certain proposals for retail development under the Town and Country Planning (Shopping Development) (England and Wales) (No. 2) Direction 1993. If any local authority failed to notify the Secretary of State of a planning application subject to either of these directions, its decision could well be challenged in the courts.

Proposals for the development of retail sites in South Yorkshire and elsewhere continue to be monitored under the provisions of these directions. The Secretary of State will consider calling-in any application for retail development which appears to conflict with published policy on the development of retail sites set out in planning policy guidance note 6 "Town Centres and Retail Developments" or otherwise raises issues of more than local importance.

Aggregates

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish minerals planning guidance note 6 on planning guidance for aggregates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We are today publishing the revised mineral planning guidance note 6 on aggregates—MPG6—for England.

To help achieve a more sustainable approach, we are reducing the landbank—the amount of land-won material, that is, sand and gravel, with planning consent at any one time—from 10 to seven years.

An assured supply of aggregates for construction is a basic requirement of a healthy economy. But sustainable development means that we must reduce our very high dependence on primary aggregates and make more use of substitutes such as secondary and recycled material. We need to seek better patterns of supply and use of resources, and more environmentally acceptable ways of working mineral sites and restoring these sites once work has ceased.

As a first step in achieving this, industry is being asked to reduce its dependence on land won aggregates from 83 to 68 per cent. by 2006. Provision of sand and gravel in the south-east will be 10 per cent. less than that envisaged for the same 15-year period in the current MPG6 guidelines, published in 1989. Industry is asked to increase its use of secondary and recycled materials by 100 per cent. To make clear that the Government are looking for early progress towards sustainable development, these guidelines will run to 2006 and not 2011 as assumed in the draft guidelines issued in January 1993.

We are inviting industry to come forward with proposals on how these targets can be achieved and developed.

We propose to establish, on a trial basis, a help line to provide practical advice to the industry on specifications and ways to increase the use of recycled and secondary materials in particular projects.

As the construction and repair of roads consumes some 30 per cent. of all aggregates, my Department intends to conduct research, jointly with the Department of Transport, into how to increase the use of recycled and secondary materials in the construction and repair of roads.

We will also be commissioning further research to enable monitoring and measurement of the progress towards the target set in MPG6.

A copy of MPG6 has been placed in the House Library.

Waste Management

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will lay before Parliament regulations to enable the introduction of waste management licensing under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994, laid before Parliament today, will come into force on 1 May 1994, when the waste management licensing sections of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be commenced. The 1990 Act will then have replaced and updated most of the last generation of controls on waste under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. In the case of the scrap metal industry, however, I propose that the new system should come into force on 1 October 1994. This is to give that industry further time to consider the implications of the new system and to make any representations; in the meanwhile, that industry will remain subject to the 1974 Act.

The new waste management licensing system will bring real improvements and benefits, putting responsibility firmly on waste operators, empowering local authorities to act to prevent pollution, making more information available to the public and raising the standards of dealing with waste. At the same time, the new regulations are closely targeted on the potentially polluting operations that need control, and will remove unnecessary burdens and red tape from many small-scale activities and especially from many types of recycling.

The regulations are the outcome of public consultations launched when draft regulations were published in August 1992 and continued since. In the light of those consultations, there has been extensive redrafting to meet the concerns and interests of industry, local authorities and the public. The regulations have also been revised to take account of European measures on waste regulation, including a new definition of waste consistent with the European definition.

The waste management licensing regulations will be complemented by the charging scheme, published on 24 March 1994, Official Report, columns 395-96, and by guidance in the form of a circular and two waste management papers. The guidance will, for the first time, be on a statutory footing. So this will give a clear signal to industry and to authorities as to the way in which the system is to operate.

The new waste management licensing system will offer improved, clear, consistent, firm controls on waste. This will benefit the public, industry, local authorities and the environment. I know the waste industry welcomes this new system and I am confident that the waste regulators will use their stronger powers to secure environmental improvements.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further information he has made available to local authorities about standard spending assessments for 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: A publication, "Standard Spending Assessment Handbook 1994/95", has been produced to provide details of the standard spending assessment of each local authority. Copies have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies are also being sent to every local authority in England, and to the local authority associations.

Alexander Fleming House

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the floor area in square feet of Alexander Fleming house; and what proportion of this is currently in use;

(2) what is the annual cost of upkeep of Alexander Fleming house;

(3) what is the current market value of Alexander Fleming house.

Sir George Young [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Alexander Fleming house was formerly occupied by the Department of Health and is now vacant following rationalisation of the Department's London offices and relocation of staff to Leeds. The building has a net internal floor area of 272,000 sq ft and future maintenance and security costs are estimated to average £500,000 per annum. The current rent is £313,157 per annum—£1·15 per sq ft—which is payable up to expiry of the lease in 1997. The offices are unlettable in the current market owing to their age and obsolescence and discussions have been held with the freeholder, with a view to early surrender of the lease. So far, however, it has not proved possible to reach agreement on acceptable terms.

PRIME MINISTER

Child Migrants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now meet representatives of the Child Migrant Trust to discuss the British child migrants scheme and Government policy towards former child migrants.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policy towards former child migrants was debated in the Adjournment debate initiated by the hon. Member on 22 November 1993, Official Report, columns 301-8.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Departments hold personal files relating to individual child migrants and their families.

The Prime Minister: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), gave details of the policy files held by the Department of Health and the Public Record Office in the Adjournment debate on 22 November 1993, Official Report, columns 305-6. No Government Department holds personal files relating to individual child migrants and their families.

Voluntary Bodies

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total amount paid in grants by central Government Departments to voluntary bodies in the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Central Government funding of voluntary organisations in 1992-93 amounted to £3,925 million. Of this, £3,362 million was payments to housing associations and £563 million went directly to voluntary organisations to support the provision of services and a wide range of activities and projects. The latter figure shows that Government funding of the voluntary sector increased in cash terms by 15 per cent. and in real terms by 11 per cent. over the level of provision in 1991-92—£490 million. Between 1979-80 and 1992-93, the level of Government support for voluntary bodies has risen by 172 per cent. in real terms.

The amount spent under individual departmental programmes in 1992-93 was as follows:

Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	209,248
Defence	16,555,426
Education	7,337,719

I am placing in the Library of the House a list of voluntary bodies funded by the Government in 1992-93, other than those funded under housing programmes and the urban programme or via non-departmental public bodies.

Ex-service Men

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations he has had with ex-service men's organisations regarding the proposed participation of former axis powers ex-service men's representatives at the 1995 50th anniversary commemorations of the ending of world war II or Remembrance day parades; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 31 March 1994]: The commemorations of the 50th anniversary of the end of world war II will include a service in St. Paul's cathedral, a parade in central London, a lunch or dinner for visiting Heads of State and a number of other events throughout the country. Peace and reconciliation will feature strongly in themes for these events.

The Ministry of Defence is leading the planning for the Government, but, at this early stage, no decision on the nature of the parade has been taken. The Ministry of Defence will consult a variety of appropriate organisations, including veterans' associations in the United Kingdom, over the content of the commemorations before final decisions are taken.

There are, however, no plans for veterans' representatives from former axis powers to take part.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Transport

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the United Kingdom Government are taking to ensure the enforcement, within the European Union, of regulation 91/628, chapter 2, article 31B concerning the transport of live animals.

Mr. Soames: Each member state is required to bring into force the laws and administrative provisions necessary to implement directive 91/628 EEC. The directive is implemented in Great Britain through the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992. In the case of contraventions involving trade with other member states, the Government take the matter up as appropriate with the authorities concerned.

Live Animals (Imports)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) of 18 March, Official Report, column 900, how many of the live sheep imported from Poland and Spain since 1 January were known to have given birth in transit or immediately on arrival in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many sheep have been held back or destroyed at lairages as being unfit to travel onwards since 1 January 1994 after import from abroad.

Mr. Soames: Three sheep were found to have lambed in consignments imported from Spain and Poland and a further six were found to be close to lambing upon veterinary examination. A total of 32 sheep were detained in portal lairages as unfit to continue their journey. These were humanely destroyed.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will list the total consignments of animals destined for slaughter arriving from Poland or Spain since 1 January listing (a) the original point of departure of each consignment and (b) the points of lairage on route;

(2) if she will give, for each consignment of animals destined for slaughter arriving from Poland or Spain since 1 January (a) the journey time for each stage of the journey, (b) the number of animals that were dead or recumbent on arrival in the United Kingdom, (c) the number that were deemed by Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food veterinary inspectors to have been unfit for transit and (d) the total of carcases that were condemned by meat inspectors.

Mr. Soames: The information is given in the table.

Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the recently established Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew conservation group; and what funding will be made available.

Mr. Jack: The centre for plant conservation at the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew incorporates elements from the body's former economic and conservation section, the living collections department, the Jodrell laboratory and seed bank. The centre's conservation activities include research, advice, and support to field programmes worldwide. It is funded mainly from the grant in aid provided annually by the Ministry to the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the present initiative being pursued for Mauritius by the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew.

Mr. Jack: The Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew was invited to collaborate with the Government of Mauritius and the Mauritian wildlife appeal fund to review the needs for plant conservation on the islands of Rodrigues and Mauritius. The intention is to develop a habitat restoration programme to ensure the long-term survival of threatened habitats and plant species on the islands. In addition, the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew is a lead organisation in the production and editing of the "Flora of the Mascarenes" and is currently propagating a number of critically endangered species for future reintroduction.

Lumpy Skin Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of lumpy skin disease occurred in each year since 1985.

Mr. Soames: There has never been a case of lumpy skin disease diagnosed in Great Britain.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 578, if she will list the 11 statutory instruments affecting the food farming and fishing industries which have been rescinded and the 18 that have been retabled during the course of this Parliament.

Mr. Jack: The following statutory instruments rescinded or relaxed burdens imposed on the food, farming or fishing industries up to the end of February 1994:

Revocations:

- The Sheep Scab (Revocation) Order 1992
- The Blue Eared Pig Disease (Revocation) Order 1992
- The Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Dioxins) (England) No. 2 (Revocation) Order 1992
- The British Wool (Guaranteed Prices) (Revocation) Order 1993
- The Bananas (Interim Measures) (Revocation) Regulations 1993
- The Agriculture Act 1993 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1993
- The Diseases of Animals (Therapeutic Substances (Revocation) Order 1993
- The Poultry Laying Flocks Testing and Registration Etc. (Revocation) Order 1993
- The Foot and Mouth (Sera and Glandular Products) (Revocation) Order 1993
- The Specified Animal Pathogens Order 1993
- The Marek's Disease (Restrictions on Vaccination) (Revocation) Order 1994

Relaxations:

- The Soft Drinks (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Poultry Breeding Flocks and Hatcheries Order 1993
- The Poultry Breeding Flocks, Hatcheries and Processed Animal Protein (Fees) Order 1993
- The Import (Plant Health Fees) (England and Wales) Order 1993
- The Animals and Animal Products (Import and Export) Regulations 1993
- The Tuberculosis (Deer) (Amendment) Order 1993
- The Import of Bovine Semen (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Sea Fish Licensing (Variation) (No. 2) Order 1993
- The Fodder Plant Seeds (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Seeds (Registration, Licensing and Enforcement) (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Food Labelling (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Local Fisheries Committees (Fees for Copy Byelaws) Order 1993
- The Specified Animal Pathogens Order 1993
- Sea Fisheries (Conservation of Sea Fish) The Undersized Lobsters Order 1993
- The Fresh Meat and Poultry Meat (Hygiene, Inspection and Examinations for Residues) (Charges) (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Common Agricultural Policy (Wine) (Amendment) Regulations 1993
- The Importation of Bees (Amendment) Order 1993

The Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Radioactivity in Sheep) (England) (Partial Revocation) Order 1994

Fisheries Council

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 12 April; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 12 April in Luxembourg, together with my noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office.

The major issue before the Council was a proposal arising from the Act of accession for Spain and Portugal. The Act requires that the provision for the Irish box must end at 31 December 1995. In addition, the Council can adopt any necessary changes in the light of a review of the operation of the provisions of the Act. Any changes decided on have to apply from 1 January 1996.

As the House knows, the Council has been addressing the issues raised by the terms of the Act at successive meetings since June 1993. At its meeting yesterday, the Council concluded the first stage of this work by adopting by qualified majority a presidency compromise proposal on the procedure to be followed for amending the current arrangements applying to Spanish and Portuguese access to the waters of the other member states. It sets out in legal form the principles to guide the Commission and the Council in settling the detailed provisions.

The regulation ensures that no changes can be made to the current rules governing Spanish and Portuguese fishing until the replacement arrangements have been set out and agreed by the Council. All the changes will have to conform to the key principles of relative stability and no increase in fishing effort. In formulating the changes, the Commission will also have to provide specifically for sensitive zones, in particular to take account of the need to balance resources and the fishing effort deployed. The area of the Irish box is noted as such a zone where fishing effort will need to be closely monitored and any necessary measures taken.

Another issue which is of particular concern to United Kingdom fishermen is the position regarding areas in which Spain and Portugal are currently not allowed to fish, such as the North sea. There is no obligation on the Commission to make any proposals for access to these areas. But if it does, access can only be given to stocks not currently subject to total allowable catches and would have to be on the basis of track records in a recent and representative period. Spain and Portugal have had no track record in the North sea since the date of their accession. This is a satisfactory outcome which fully protects the interests of the British fishing industry and provides a sound basis for the detailed negotiations over the coming months.

The Commission tabled a report on the ecological impact of drift netting, together with a proposal. The Council had a first discussion on the issues raised, including a suggestion that a derogation for use of drift nets longer than 2·5 km should be reintroduced. I made clear my firm opposition to this and the importance I attach to taking environmental implications fully into account. The derogation was not renewed. These matters will now be considered by experts taking into account the scientific evidence.

The Council discussed the current difficulties in the European fish market. Although no single factor was identified as the underlying cause, there was widespread agreement that an important part of the present difficulties is due to structural factors, notably the continuing imbalance between fishing effort and fish resources. The Commission has undertaken to prepare a full analysis of all the elements affecting the market for consideration by the Council at its next meeting in June.

The Council agreed by qualified majority a regulation on direct landings by third country fishing vessels, subjecting them to the same rules as member states' fishing vessels, notably in relation to existing hygiene controls, and to some aspects of the market regime. The market regime provisions will not apply to fish for processing or to landings by European Economic Area vessels. The United Kingdom, Denmark and the Netherlands voted against the regulation because of reservations about its practicality.

The Council also agreed autonomous tariff reductions for certain annual quotas of whitefish imports.

Fruit

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what occasions and in respect of which companies and products the United Kingdom Government have not followed a directive from the European Community concerning fruit or fruit products.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 21 March 1994]: The United Kingdom has not yet amended its national legislation implementing EC Council directive 93/77 to take account of EC Commission directive 93/45 concerning the manufacturer of fruit nectars without the addition of sugar.

However, enforcement authorities are aware of the requirements of directive 93/45 and will take this into account in their enforcement action. The United Kingdom implementing legislation will be amended to take account of directive 93/45 at the earliest opportunity.

TRANSPORT

Tamar Road Crossing

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on the second Tamar road crossing project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The consultants who undertook a study of a feasibility of the new Tamar crossing advised that a new crossing is likely to be needed by the turn of the century if unacceptable congestion is to be avoided. Their report was published in June 1993 and comments were invited on the four possible routes which had been identified.

I am considering the responses to the consultation before deciding if, when and how the proposal for a new Tamar crossing should be taken forward.

Car Parking

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations apply to the parking of tax-exempt private vehicles on off-street local authority parking sites.

Mr. Key: It is entirely for individual local authorities to decide which classes of vehicle may use any off-street car parks they provide, and to determine the terms and conditions under which they may do so.

London Taxis

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement about London taxi fares and fees.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State has made an order increasing London taxi fares by about 2·88 per cent. on average with effect from Saturday 23 April 1994. The new tariff will incorporate a minimum fare of £1—including an unchanged hire charge of 60p—for the first 564 yds or 114 seconds. The rate will then be 20p for every 282 yds or 57 seconds up to six miles and 20p for each 188 yds or 38 seconds thereafter.

The Secretary of State has decided that there will be no increase this year in the fees for London taxi driver and vehicle licences, currently £87 and £78 respectively.

A38

Mr. H[illegible]ks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the line of his Department's preferred route for the A38 trunk road improvement between Saltash and Trerulefoot.

Mr. Key: I expect to announce our preferred route for this scheme shortly.

Permanent Secretary

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of the basic salary of the permanent secretary within his Department and the performance pay arrangements under which he operates.

Mr. Norris: The permanent secretary is paid £95,051 per annum with effect from 1 April 1994. There is no performance pay scheme for permanent secretaries.

Railway Station Staff

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are currently employed as station staff by British Rail; and how many were so employed in (a) 1990, (b) 1985 and (c) 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not readily available in the form requested, but the number of staff employed in stations, yards and depots is as follows:

	Number
31 December 1980	25,148
31 March 1985	19,941
31 March 1990	17,039
26 February 1994	12,765

Aircraft Movements (Cardiff)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the likely consequences for aircraft movements from Cardiff, Wales airport of the negotiations regarding access for American passenger aircraft to Heathrow.

Mr. Norris: We do not foresee any material effect on aircraft movements at Cardiff, Wales airport arising directly from any changes which might be agreed in access for American passenger aircraft to Heathrow. However, it is possible that, as part of wider negotiations with the United States over liberalisation of air services, existing opportunities for United Kingdom and United States airlines to mount charter services between Cardiff and the United States and for United Kingdom airlines to mount a scheduled service could be supplemented by additional opportunities for United States carriers to offer scheduled services. It would be for the commercial judgment of the airlines whether to operate such services.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, columns 761-62, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department in each of the last five years and the number of contracts each has undertaken.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 April 1994]: I am placing the information in the Library.

London, Tilbury and Southend Line

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, concerning daily flows of rail passengers on the London, Tilbury and Southend line to Fenchurch Street what is (a) the approximate number of passengers carried in trains departing from Barking for Fenchurch Street on a normal weekday between the hours 0700 and 10.00, irrespective of their boarding stations, (b) the best estimate available of the number of passengers departing westbound on the District line from Barking, between those hours and (c) the numbers of passengers joining westbound District line trains between Barking and Bow Road between those hours; and what assessment he has made of the total effect of withdrawing all main line trains between Barking and Fenchurch Street between 22 July and 5 September next.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The London, Tilbury and Southend—LT and S—line currently carries 22,000 passengers on all its services into London during the peak hours of 07.00 to 10.00.

(b) London Underground Ltd.—LUL—says that in 1990, 4,300 passengers boarded westbound District and Hammersmith and City lines trains at Barking between 07.00 and 10.00 am each weekday.

(c) The same survey showed that the number of passengers on westbound district line trains between Barking and Bow Road during the morning peak were as follows:

	Number
Barking—East Ham	14,900
East Ham—Upton Park	21,600
Upton Park—Plaistow	26,200
Plaistow—West Ham	30,400
West Ham—Bromley-by-Bow	30,600
Bromley-by-Bow—Bow Road	31,300

LT and S management have made the following assessments and arrangements.

The temporary timetable, which will be in operation during the closure of Fenchurch Street will provide 16,300 seats into Liverpool Street. Although, due to limited track and platform capacity, it will not be possible to run extra Great Eastern trains into Liverpool Street, additional capacity will also be provided on Great Eastern services form Southend Victoria and Colchester, and it is expected that some LT and S passengers will travel from Upminster to Romford in order to connect with these services. Passengers at the eastern end of the route will be encouraged to use Great Eastern services.

Passenger numbers are traditionally reduced by 13 per cent. during the summer period and LT and S management estimate that this will rise to 20 per cent. during the closure of Fenchurch Street.

LT and S management estimate that the maximum number of passengers needing to transfer to LUL services for onward travel by tube is in the range of 1,300 to 2,800, and LUL has been advised accordingly. In addition to its normal services, starting in May, LUL will provide an extra four trains an hour during the peak period on the Hammersmith and City line from Barking.

By diverting many LT and S trains into Liverpool Street, it is hoped that the effect of withdrawing mainline trains into Fenchurch Street will be minimised and every effort is being made to advise passengers of their alternatives before 22 July. Additional staff will be on hand at Barking to assist with passenger transfers, and LT and S management are continuing to work with local rail user groups to offer the best possible service during the closure.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information technology consultants his Department has employed and for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage, which was established on 13 April 1992, has contracted out operational support for the Department computer users and systems to Sema Group through open competition. The Department has employed consultants from Sema Group to support the development of Departmental information systems—IS—and assist in the procurement of a number of system solutions. Consultancy support from CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems, has also been used to assist in procurement and the development of the Departmental IS strategy. The cost of consultancy support was £140,000 in 1992-93 and £38,000 in 1993-94.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 460, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department in each of the last five years and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

Mr. Sproat: The consultants used and numbers of contracts awarded by my Department since it was established in April 1992 and its two executive agencies are listed in the table, together with the start date for each contract. My answer on 25 March did not include the number of consultancies awarded by the two agencies, although the costs given did include the agencies' expenditure. The total number of contracts awarded is 110.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what computer systems his Department has brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage, which was established on 13 April 1992, has introduced a personal computer-based office automation system, mainly for word processing, and a Library management system. The Department also uses computer services provided by the Accounts Service Agency and has introduced systems to support correspondence tracking, the handling of registered files, and responses to parliamentary questions. An on-line telephone directory has also been developed. The cost of all computer systems was £730,000 in 1992-93 and £950,000 in 1993-94. All the computer systems brought in by the Department are still in use.

Broadcasting Directive

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he has been notified by the Commission of the European Union of the action it intends to initiate in the European Court against the United Kingdom on the broadcasting directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: We have been notified that the Commission has decided to open proceedings against the United Kingdom in the European Court of Justice over the way in which we have implemented article 2 of the "television without frontiers" directive. Under section 43 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, the criterion for deciding whether satellite television services fall within United Kingdom jurisdiction is the place where the broadcasting signals are uplinked. The Commission argues that the appropriate criterion is the place where the broadcaster is established. This difference of approach does not, however, appear to have been of any practical significance in terms of our ability to take action against unacceptable services.

Central Council for Physical Recreation

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what proportion of the annual revenue of the Central Council for Physical Recreation is spent on salaries and running costs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much revenue the Central Council for Physical Recreation obtained in subscriptions from its member organisations in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sproat: The Central Council of Physical Recreation is not a Government body and I am not, therefore, able to provide this information.

EMPLOYMENT

Dounreay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement as to how the clothing of a German visitor to the nuclear power station in Dounreay in March became radioactive; what was the cause of this incident; what was the cost of supplying alternative clothing; and on how many other occasions this has occurred.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There was no such incident in March 1994. An incident was reported on 25 September 1985; a radiation monitor detected contamination on the clothing of a German visitor; this had resulted from spillage of radio-iodine in the visitor's workplace in Germany. This incident was fully reported at the time.

Small Armaments Systems

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest employment figures for those manufacturing small armaments systems in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information is from the 1991 Great Britain and Northern Ireland censuses of employment. Employment figures have been taken from the 1980 standard industrial classification activity heading 3290 which covers ordnance, small arms, ammunition and tracked armoured fighting vehicles. The estimated number of employees in employment in the activity in the United Kingdom at September 1991 was 13,500.

Part-time Workers

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action the Government are intending to take to implement the House of Lords ruling that the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 is in breach of European Union laws in discriminating against women because of its treatment of part-time workers.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are carefully considering this judgment to ascertain its full implications and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Training Providers Cost Survey

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the 1992 training providers cost survey commissioned by his Department from Coopers and Lybrand; and if he will state the reason for not publishing it at the time he received it.

Miss Widdecombe: The 1992 survey of training provider costs was undertaken to assess the costs to training providers of delivering youth training and employment training and to give the Government information about value for money achieved with taxpayers' money. The training and enterprise councils —TECs—and training providers which participated in the survey were given an assurance that all the information collected would be treated as confidential. As the information is commercially sensitive and could inappropriately influence negotiations between TECs and training providers it remains confidential to TECs and Employment Department management.

Youth Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the expenditure on youth training in Great Britain, in cash terms and in 1993-94 prices in each year since 1989-90; and what is the expected outturn for 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table:

Employment Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the expenditure on training for work employment training and its predecessors and employment action in Great Britain in cash terms and in 1993-94 prices in each year since 1989-90; and what is the expected outturn for 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table:

Training for work is one of a wide range of options open to unemployed people. The Employment Department group offered a record total of 1·5 million opportunities in 1993-94 to help unemployed people back into work.

Employment Schemes

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people have participated in work trials in 1993 in each region and for Great Britain as a whole; and how many participants have secured full-time or part-time employment with their sponsoring employer;

(2) how many unemployed people have taken part in the job interview guarantee scheme in each region in each quarter of 1993; and how many secured full-time or part-time employment with their sponsoring employer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 13 April 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions to him about Work Trials and Job Interview Guarantee.

You asked how many unemployed people have taken part in these schemes in each region in 1993 and how many participants have secured full or part-time employment with the sponsoring employer. The information is set out by region in the attached tables. The figures provided show totals of clients placed into full and part-time work as we do not collect this information separately.

I hope this is helpful.

EDUCATION

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what computer systems his Department has brought in for what function, and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Forth: Over the last five financial years, capital expenditure by the Department on computer systems has been:

1989-90	2·0
1990-91	2·0
1991-92	1·8
1992-93	0·9
1993-94	0·3

I am sending the hon. Member details of the systems installed, their function and current use.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information technology consultants his Department has employed in each of the last five years; for what purpose; and at what total cost.

Mr. Forth: Over the last five financial years, expenditure by the Department on information technology consultants has been:

1989-90	685,416
1990-91	610,200
1991-92	518,887
1992-93	571,000
1993-94	674,690

I am sending the hon. Member a detailed list of the firms of consultants employed and the purpose of the consultancies.

Student Awards

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the expenditure by local education authorities in the United Kingdom on discretionary awards and any other forms of support for students in the further education sector in each of the years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what information he has on how much local education authorities are planning to spend for this purpose in 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: Local education authority returns to my Department show that expenditure on discretionary awards for further education in England and Wales was £163·9 million in 1991-92 academic year and £169·3 million—provisional—in 1992-93. Their returns for 1993-94 are not yet available. It is for LEAs to decide how much to spend on discretionary awards in 1994-94: they do not provide the Department with information on their plans.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state for each school for which he has approved for grant-maintained status since 1 January 1993 the (a) number of pupils attending the school at the time of approval and (b) the pupil capacity of the school.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information held by the Department showing the number of pupils on roll and the school capacity has been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to publish or to instruct the Electoral Reform Society to publish the result of every grant-maintained ballot.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. It is for each governing body to decide how best to inform parents of the result and whether to publicise it more widely.

Camberwell Child Guidance Centre

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which organisations will take over the responsibilities of the education staff of the Camberwell child guidance centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Education staff of the Camberwell child guidance centre were supported by the Southwark local education authority which decided, after consultations with schools, to discontinue the funding after March 1994. I am informed that the staff concerned took voluntary severance. These are matters for the authority: the Department cannot intervene. I understand that the psychiatric service for children and young people in the area is to be reviewed by Southwark's joint community care planning group for children over the next six months.

Discretionary Awards

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his response to the report on local education authorities' provision of discretionary awards published recently by the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation.

Mr. Boswell: I welcome this report. It contains much useful information. It is a matter of regret that LEAs were not able to provide more. The overall position is by no means as gloomy as some had predicted but there are striking differences between LEAs' policies—differences which it is hard to justify on general educational grounds. I will want to give the report careful consideration before deciding what action may be necessary. I expect LEAs will also want to consider what needs to be done.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will lay before Parliament the draft code of practice giving practical guidance in respect of the discharge by local education authorities and the governing bodies of maintained schools of their functions under part III of the Education Act 1993.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales are today laying before both Houses a draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs, as required under section 158 of the Education Act 1993.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I signed last week the Education (Special Educational Needs) Regulations 1994 and the Education (Special Educational Needs) (Information) Regulations 1994. These regulations are also being laid today. They have been made under powers provided by part III of the Education Act 1993 and underpin the draft code of practice.

Subject to Parliament's approval of the draft code, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education intends to publish a booklet entitled "Special Educational Needs: A Guide for Parents". This will give parents a clear explanation of how they can secure help if they believe their child has special educational needs. Copies of a draft of the guide are being placed in the Libraries. A similar guide will be prepared for issue in Wales.

My right hon. Friend is placing in the Libraries illustrative mock-ups of the proposed final design of the code of practice and the guide for parents. All the documents presented to Parliament today—the draft code of practice, the regulations and the draft guide for parents —are being made available to the Education Select Committee, the all-party disablement group and the all-party children group.

Consultation Documents

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all the documents currently issued for consultation in the last year.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 31 March 1994]: The information is as follows. The list includes only those documents that have gone out to a substantial number of recipients as part of a formal consultation exercise. It does not include consultation documents issued by non-departmental public bodies on matters which fall within their responsibility.

Schools Organisation:

Circular 6/93 (Admissions to Maintained Schools);

leaflet—"Your Child's Next School—A Guide to Secondary Admissions";

1994 version of Code of Practice on Appeals for grant-maintained schools;

EC Commission Green Paper on the European Dimension of Education.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position with regard to the supply of humanitarian aid to Angola; which British-based relief organisations are working there; and if they are able to continue their work with reasonable security.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have now allocated almost £20 million of humanitarian aid to Angola since the United Nations international appeal in June 1993. This includes our share of comparable EC aid. Several British based non-governmental organisations—NGOs—including Save the Children Fund, CARE, CAFOD, Christian Aid, Concern and OXFAM are active in Angola and doing a very good job. We are providing £2 million of our assistance through NGOs. In spite of continued fighting in some parts of Angola, the NGOs are expanding their operations in relative safety. We are monitoring the situation closely.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he proposes to appoint a non-governmental organisations co-ordinator in Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA's non-governmental organisations liaison and support officer was appointed on 28 March. He is currently in Addis Ababa undertaking a briefing programme prior to moving to Hargeisa.

HEALTH

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list by regional health authority how many people have died each year from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in each of the past five years;

(2) if she will list by regional health authority the dates and locations of each death from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease over the past five years, and the respective date on which her Department's Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease surveillance units were first notified of each suspected case; and if she will set out the reasons for notification not being provided earlier in those cases where notification had not been given before death.

Mr. Sackville: Table 1 shows deaths from definite and probable Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease—CJD—in England and Wales from 1989 to 1993 by regional health authority. This includes sporadic, familial and iatrogenic CJD, but excludes the small number of cases of Gerstmann-Straussler syndrome.

Dates and locations of death have not been given. CJD is a very rare disease, and this information could make it possible to identify individual patients.

Reporting of CJD cases before death started in May 1990 when the CJD unit was established. Figures are given in table 2. The unit does not collect information about why some cases are reported after death.

NHS Nursing Staff

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of unqualified NHS nursing staff joining the NHS in each year since 1990, who were (a) joining directly after completing full-time education, (b) aged under 21 years, (c) joining from other NHS units, (d) joining from other care sector employment, (e) joining from other employment, (f) joining from non-activity in the labour market and (g) joining from unemployment.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 21 June 1993 at columns 29-31 for the latest available information.

Midwives

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of qualified or midwifery staff joining the NHS in each year since 1990, who (a) were newly qualifying student nurses with employed status, (b) were newly qualifying Project 2000 students, (c) were registered nurses entering the NHS after a period of non-employment, (d) joined NHS units directly after being employed by another NHS unit and (e) joined NHS units directly after being employed in other nursing, such as general practitioner nursing, nursing homes and independent hospitals etc.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table.

a. Newly qualified student nurses with employed status	Numbers	n/a	n/a	[1]1,610	[1]5,480
	WTE	n/a	n/a	[1]6,260	[1]5,690
b. Newly qualified project 2000 students	Numbers	n/a	n/a	[1]—	[1]—
	WTE	n/a	n/a	[1]—	[1]—
c. Registered nurses entering the NHS after a period of unemployment	Numbers	n/a	n/a	2,050	1,490
	WTE	n/a	n/a	1,530	1,220
d. Joined NHS units directly after being employed by another NHS Unit	Numbers	21,600	18,490	[2]—	[2]—
	WTE	n/a	n/a	[2]—	[2]—
e. Joined NHS units directly after being employed in nursing	Numbers	6,790	5,350	n/a	n/a
	WTE	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
[1] It is not possible to separately identify newly qualified staff previously with employed status from those who had been Project 2000 students.
[2] It is not possible to identify these staff due to definitional problems regarding transfers. Figures appear inflated due to the recording (in some regions) of movements within the regions.
[3] Where provided numbers for 1993 are based on returns from 11 regions, whole time equivalents are based on returns from 12.

Figures for 1992 are based on returns from 12 regions.

Medical Negligence Claims

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of medical negligence claims involving national health service bodies for each year since 1990 in each medical specialty.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Invalidity Benefit Tribunals

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given to family health service authorities or advice to general practitioners (a) who are requested to produce reports for invalidity benefit tribunals and (b) regarding charging patients for medical reports to be submitted to invalidity benefit tribunals.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement regarding the management of the special hospitals at Rampton and Broadmoor.

Mr. Bowis: The special hospitals are each managed by a hospital management team, headed by a general manager. The general managers report to the Special Hospitals Service Authority, which is accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Leeds General Infirmary

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were on the waiting list at the Leeds general infirmary on 1 March 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting lists for in-patient and day case treatment by national health service trust is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library. It is published twice yearly with figures for March and September. Figures for March 1994 have not yet been published. Information on waiting times to first out-patient appointment is not yet collected.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many complaints were made by patients in relation to the treatment and care received at the Leeds general infirmary in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(2) what was the total number of cancelled operations in the Leeds general infirmary since March 1993.

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the United Leeds Teaching Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Tony Clegg, chairman of the trust, for details.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the proportion of ambulance calls to which a response time of (a) 19 minutes and (b) eight minutes has been achieved in each ambulance service area, for each of the last five years, giving the proportion for previous constituent areas where appropriate.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested may be found in the Library in the booklets of summary information on patient transport services published by the Department of Health statistics division.

Child Migrants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of placing and maintaining British child migrants during each year between 1964 and 1967.

Mr. Bowis: The information required was not collected centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation she has made of the adequacy of current grant aid to the Child Migrants Trust.

Mr. Bowis: The Child Migrants Trust applied to the Department for a core grant in October 1993. An official subsequently visited the trust and evaluated their finances. The Department has recently awarded a grant of £30,000 per year for the next three financial years 1994-95 to 1996-97.

Nursing Homes (Fees)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the relatives of nursing home residents may reclaim fees paid in advance if the resident dies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The ability to reclaim fees will depend on the terms of the contract for the provision of nursing home care. This is a matter for negotiation between the home owner and whoever pays for the resident's care. It is not for the Government to specify the terms for payment of fees.

National Health Service Management Executive (Regional Outposts)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the dates and locations for the first board meetings of each of the eight regional outposts of the national health service management executive; and if the meetings will be held in public.

Dr. Mawhinney: The regional offices of the national health service executive do not have boards.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1990 the expenditure on gross redundancy payments for each health authority and national health service trust in England.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 March 1994]: Figures for redundancy payments for trusts are available only for 1991-92 and 1992-93. The information is shown in tables that will be placed in the Library. It should be noted that the figures for 1992-93 are only provisional and have not yet been validated. They are, therefore, not wholly reliable.

The closure of psychiatric hospitals in connection with the "Care in the Community" programme and management restructuring throughout the national health service, as a result of the national health service reforms, are the main reasons for the increase in redundancy payments. This has delivered valuable savings and led to greater efficiency in the NHS, resulting in greater numbers of in-patient admissions.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Occupied Territories

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what were the major conclusions of the Palestinian-Israeli talks held in Cairo last week; and what British contribution is planned as a result;

(2) if he will make a statement on the agreement between the PLO and Israeli Government about the deployment of a Palestinian police force in the occupied territories; what provision was made for the deployment of an observer team; what is its mandate; what is its national make-up; and what British offers of assistance were made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to his written questions on this subject on 12 April, Official Report, columns 14-16.

Iran (Dissidents)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the recent parliamentary human rights group reprt on alleged involvement by Iranian Government officials in the assassination of Iranian dissidents overseas; and what steps he is taking to raise the matter at the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have written to the chairman of the parliamentary human rights group, Lord Avebury. We and our European partners drafted and co-sponsored a resolution at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, adopted on 9 March 1994, expressing concern at continuing reports of Iranian involvement in terrorism. The resolution urged the Government of Iran to "refrain from activities such as those mentioned in the report of the Special Representative against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad and to cooperate wholeheartedly with the authorities of other countries in investigating and punishing offences reported by them".

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on developments in respect of the Organisation of African Unity proposal to send a peace-keeping force to Burundi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The first elements of the OAU observer mission have arrived in Burundi. On 6 April east African Heads of State and the Organisation of African Unity Secretary-General met in Dar es Salaam. They reaffirmed the vital role of the OAU in restoring confidence in Burundi and called for the strengthening of its engagement. We very much hope that despite the tragic death of President Ntaryamira the process of national reconciliation will continue.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current position in the peace talks in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The peace talks in Lusaka have been stalled for the last month over the issue of UNITA's participation in Government. However, we understand that the gap between the two parties is narrow. The United Nations Secretary-General has urged both the Government and UNITA to show the flexibility needed finally to reach a comprehensive settlement.

Iraq

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to urge for a review of the sanctions on Iraq and their effects on the civilian population of Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions are reviewed every 60 days by the Security Council. At the latest—the 18th—sanctions review on 18 March, the Security Council concluded that there were no grounds for lifting sanctions.

Our quarrel is with the regime, not the long-suffering Iraqi people. Responsibility for the hardship of the civilian population lies with Saddam Hussein.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the EU intends to take to counteract the Greek blockade of Macedonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Commission announced on 6 April that it would institute infraction proceedings against Greece in the European Court of Justice on 13 April if by that date Greece had not revoked its decision to deny the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia access to the port of Salonika. We support this decision.

Human Rights

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have recently been taken to improve the resources open to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Commission on Human Rights, which had its annual session from January to March 1994, is adequately funded from within the UN regular budget.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek assurances from the Sudan Government that the Nuba mountains area will now be accessible to international non-governmental organisations following the IGADD—Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development—meeting in Nairobi on 17 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The sub-committee established at the recent IGADD talks to implement the declaration of principles allowing free access of relief supplies and humanitarian assistance began work on 6 April. Representatives from the UN-sponsored Operation Life-Line are expected to participate. We shall be closely monitoring the committee's progress in advance of the next high-level IGADD talks in mid-May.

North Korea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if North Korea has yet agreed to International Atomic Energy Agency inspections of all seven nuclear facilities in the country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 15 February, North Korea agreed to the IAEA's requirements for inspection at each of its seven declared nuclear facilities. However, on 21 March, the IAEA director general stated that the inspections, carried out between 3 and 14 March, had not permitted the agency to conclude that nuclear material had not been diverted for military use in North Korea since February 1993. Agency inspectors had not been allowed to carry out previously agreed inspection activities at one of the facilities. On 31 March, the president of the UN Security Council issued a statement calling on North Korea to comply fully with its safeguards agreement.

Mercenaries

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 28 January, Official Report, column 468, on the possible recruitment of United Kingdom mercenaries by the Azeri Government, when he expects his investigations to be completed; and what further information he has received.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Officials have found no evidence to support the allegations of recruitment of United Kingdom mercenaries by the Azerbaijani Government. Any further information from hon. Members will be carefully considered and any evidence of illegal activity referred to the prosecuting authorities.

SCOTLAND

Rent Review Service

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for how many private sector tenancies regulated under the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 a fair rent has been set by the rent review service at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Fair rents for regulated tenancies are registered by the rent registration service under the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984. Fair rent registrations recorded on the rent register can date back to the 1960s and a high proportion will relate to dwellings which are no longer regulated tenancies, since changes in status are not reported to the rent registration service. As fair rents apply for a minimum of three years, unless there is a significant change of circumstances, the total number of fair rents registered during the last three years provides an approximate guide to the current number of regulated tenancies. The figures are as follows:

	Number
1991	15,554
1992	12,411
1993	12,163

Education

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to re-organising the arrangements for assessment and certification of (a) vocational and (b) non-vocational education in Scottish schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The policy document "Higher Still: Opportunity for All" sets out plans to draw together Scottish Examination Board—SEB—and Scottish Vocational Education Council—SCOTVEC—courses into a single curriculum and assessment framework. There will be a mixture of internal and external assessment. All passes will be presented on a single certificate.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has considered instituting a points system to enable comparison between standard grades, highers, advanced highers and national certificate modules.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Our policy document "Higher Still: Opportunity for All" stated that we propose to consult those who use qualifications and awards about a possible points system to make clearer the compatibility and equivalences within the new system.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to merging the Scottish Vocational Education Council and the Scottish Examination Board; and what representations he has received from Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interested bodies on this matter.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Our policy statement "Higher Still: Opportunity for All" stated that we will be examining options for the best relationship between SCOTVEC and SEB for the administration of the new awards. During consultation on the Howie committee report on upper secondary curriculum and awards 73 respondents, including COSLA, commented on this matter.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which body will be responsible for assessing and issuing achievement certificates for the new highers, advanced highers and national certificate modules.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Arrangements for administering the new awards will be developed by the Scottish Office Education Department, SCOTVEC and SEB as part of the development programme for implementing the decisions announced in "Higher Still: Opportunity for All".

Examinations

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to changing the time of year at which pupils in the upper secondary school sit examinations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to change the time of year at which pupils in the upper secondary school sit examinations.

Seal Cull

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to institute a seal cull; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no plans to authorise a seal cull.

Highlands and Islands Veterinary Service

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he now intends to make to the Highlands and Islands veterinary services schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 31 March 1994]: We are still considering what changes should be made to this scheme. Officials from my department hope to meet representatives of the British Veterinary Association soon to take matters forward.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the British Veterinary Association has yet responded to any consultation guidelines regarding the Highland and Islands veterinary services schemes.

Mr. Lang: The British Veterinary Association was one of the bodies which responded to our consultation exercise in 1991. We have since had further correspondence with the BVA.

Special Conservation Areas

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the implications for existing economic and recreational activities of an area which is accorded special area of conservation status.

Sir Hector Monro: The implications for existing economic and recreational activities in an area designated as a special area of conservation will vary according to the conservation interest for which the site is designated and the nature and extent of the existing activities.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Scottish Office will be taking to obtain local views on economic and social factors which might moderate the list of possible special areas of conservation prior to the list being issued for public consultation.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government believe that when a list of candidate special areas of conservation has been drawn up, the owners and occupiers of those sites should be the first to be informed. In drawing up their proposals the Government will take account of available information on economic and social factors, including relevant local authority structure and local plans. Moreover, the Scottish Office would be interested in any advice which local authorities and other organisations might care to give about areas which they consider suitable or unsuitable for proposal as special areas of conservation.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress towards construction of the Skye bridge, with particular reference to reported difficulties encountered in respect of concrete poured atop the north pier; and if he will estimate what financial implications this will have for the project as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The particularly bad weather conditions experienced over the winter months have caused the construction of the main bridge to be not as well advanced as other parts of the scheme. The difficulty with the concrete at the top of the north pier has not been an obstacle to progress. The contractor is currently reviewing his programme and, given good weather conditions coupled with an improvement in output, anticipates completion of the bridge in autumn 1995. The financial implications associated with the construction contract lie with the contractor and the developer: there are no implications either for the level or the duration of the tolls, which remain as published in the made toll order.

Lumpy Skin Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of lumpy skin disease occurred in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: There have been no recorded cases of lumpy skin disease in Scotland.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to his Department of the merging of the boundaries of local authorities proposed in the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill by the Ordnance Survey; and how much of this expenditure was attributable to the boundaries of the proposed East Renfrewshire authority.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Final costs to the Department in respect of the use of Ordnance Survey services are not yet known since work on boundaries is continuing in response to commitments given to the Standing Committee considering the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill. The cost in relation to the mercing of the boundary of the proposed East Renfrewshire authority, prior to the introduction of the Bill, was £253.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library all submissions made to him concerning the reorganisation of area tourist boards in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: I have arranged for a copy of the submission which I commissioned from the Scottish tourist board to be placed in the Library. All other submissions were unsolicited and are not therefore covered by the understanding about publication applied to responses to formal consultation exercises.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a local enterprise company has absolute discretion, subject to Government guidelines as to who is on its management board.

Mr. Stewart: Government guidelines require that two thirds of a local enterprise company's directors, including the chairman, are drawn from senior members of the private sector and that all directors should either live or work in the local area. Subject to these requirements, and any others laid down in the company's articles of association, the selection of board members is at the discretion of the company's members.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish Enterprise about skill shortages in the Scottish economy; and what he proposes to do about them.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from Scottish Enterprise about skill shortages in the Scottish economy. It is an objective of Scottish Enterprise to improve the performance of new and existing businesses by increasing their commitment to plan and invest in training and development to meet business needs. Scottish Enterprise is also responsible for funding and co-ordinating the provision of training for young people and unemployed adults through local enterprise companies to meet the needs of the local labour markets.

Students

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers of full-time students in higher education institutions who are (a) home based, (b) living away from their parents' home and studying in London or (c) living away from their parents' home and studying elsewhere.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: For 1992-93, the number of undergraduate students receiving awards from the then awards division of the Scottish Office Education Department, now Student Awards Agency for Scotland, was (a) 30,553, (b) 809 and (c) 54,897.

Home Helps

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what levels of charges are imposed by local authorities on persons not in receipt of income-related benefits for home helps.

Mr. Stewart: Local authorities have discretionary powers under section 87(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, as amended, to charge such an amount as they consider reasonable for adult non-residential care services, including domiciliary—home help—services, taking account of individual financial circumstances. This applies irrespective of whether the client is in receipt of income-related benefits or not.

Nursery Education

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many three-year olds and four-year olds are receiving nursery education in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole; and what percentage these represent of the total number of children of this age group in both Strathclyde and Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Number and percentage of three and four year olds attending nursery schools

	Education authority nursery schools and departments: Nursery departments of independent schools		Private nursery schools[1]
	Number attending at September 1993	Percentage of population[2]	Number attending at March 1993	Percentage of population[2]
Strathclyde	19,304	32·3	1,816	2·6
Scotland	48,132	36·9	3,677	2·5

[1] Registered with local authority social work departments.
[2] Provisional: based on the mid-1992 population estimates from the General Register Office (Scotland).

Educational Support Services

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which education authorities offer educational support services for children suffering from autism; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Education authorities have a duty to provide for the special educational needs of children belonging to their area and they fulfil this responsibility through appropriate learning support.

Centrally held records do not identify specifically the number of children suffering from autism or autistic tendencies, but it is likely that all education authorities in Scotland will have autistic children belonging to their area for whom they make educational provision.

Housing Stock

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum is required to bring the council housing stock in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole up to satisfactory habitable standards; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally. It is up to individual local authorities to undertake local house condition surveys of their stock to assess the state of their council housing and to decide how best to deploy the substantial resources available to them to improve the standard of their housing. I have asked all local authorities to give priority to tackling below tolerable standard housing and dampness and condensation in preparing their housing plans and capital programmes.

Information on the general state of repair of public sector housing stock is quoted in the report of the 1991 Scottish house condition survey which is available in the Library.

Mineral Workings

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet set a date for publication of the national planning policy guideline on land for mineral working; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have today published the national planning policy guideline—NPPG—on land for mineral working. Copies are available in the Library.

This is the first comprehensive planning policy statement on the working of minerals in Scotland. It seeks to promote economic activity without compromising Scotland's important environmental assets. In so doing, it introduces a general presumption in favour of properly assessed and controlled mineral extraction, cautions against such activity in particularly sensitive locations, and requires high standards of environmental care. It also commends a greater reliance on renewable and recycled materials, in line with our undertakings in the recently published "UK Sustainable Development Strategy", Cm. 2426.

In addition, the NPPG provides explicit guidance on coastal superquarries. I have concluded that such developments have a potentially important contribution to make to the economy at both national and local level, but that their scale and potential impact require them to be controlled carefully. Based on previous research and a preference for a dispersed geographical pattern, I have therefore stipulated preferred search areas on the north coast of Highland region, in the Shetland isles and in the Western isles. In the first instance, I have also chosen to limit numbers, allowing for no more than four such developments, including the existing superquarry at Glensanda, over the 15-year period to 2009. Proposals will be notified to me accordingly.

This will be subject to review in the normal manner. In the meantime, I believe it represents a realistic strategy that will allow a sensible balance to be struck between social and economic benefits on the one hand and environmental care on the other.

WALES

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date he expects all applications for sheep annual premium for this year in Wales to have been paid out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Payments of the final instalment to 1993 claimants should begin within the next month or so, and be completed by June, except in those cases which are held up by queries or quota problems.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received within the last six months on the subject of the payment of sheep annual premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Between 1 October 1993 and 31 March 1994 I received about 100 representations. At 31 March some 90 per cent. of all valid claims had been paid.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual sums of money committed since the inception of the European regional development fund to each recipient local authority and the annual amounts paid to each from the fund.

Mr. Redwood: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 625, how many members of the public have written to him to (a) support and (b) oppose the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed new unitary authority of Cardiff; and if he will list their wards of residence.

Mr. Redwood: Since the publication of the White Paper "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future" I have not received any representations from members of the public about the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed Cardiff unitary authority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 625 if he will list all the specific representations he has received in favour of the inclusion of Llanelly in the proposed new unitary authority of Powys, with the date on which each one was made.

Mr. Redwood: Since publication of the Local Government (Wales) Bill, I have received one representation from the chairman of Powys county council, in February 1994, supporting the inclusion of Llanelly in the proposed Powys unitary authority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those specific representations that have been made to him opposing the inclusion of Wick, St. Brides Major and Ewenny in the proposed new unitary authority of Vale of Glamorgan, giving the date on which each representation was made.

Mr. Redwood: Since publication of the White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", I have received representations opposing the inclusion of Wick, St. Bride's Major and Ewenny in the proposed Vale of Glamorgan unitary authority from:

Win Griffiths MP
Ogwr borough council
St. Bride's Major town council
Ewenny community council
Wick community council and 176 members of the public

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specific representations he has had opposing the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed new unitary authority of Cardiff; and when each representation was made.

Mr. Redwood: Since publication of the White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", I received one representation from Taff Ely borough council dated 6 April 1993 in opposition to the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed Cardiff unitary authority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, columns 322-23, if he will list the date of each specific representation that he has received favouring the inclusion of Wick, St. Brides Major and Ewenny in the proposed new unitary authority of Vale of Glamorgan.

Mr. Redwood: Since publication of the White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", I have received representations from 13 organisations and individuals in support of the inclusion of Wick, St. Bride's Major and Ewenny in the proposed Vale of Glamorgan unitary authority dated as follows:

Dates of representations expressing support for the inclusion of Wick, St. Bride's Major and Ewenny in the proposed Vale of Glamorgan unitary authority:

7 March 1993
9 March 1993
11 March 1993
21 March 1993
23 March 1993
29 March 1993
31 March 1993
20 May 1993
10 June 1993
7 July 1993
12 July 1993
26 January 1994

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 625, if he will list all the specific representations that he has received in favour of the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed new unitary authority of Cardiff; and when each one was made.

Mr. Redwood: Since the publication of the White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", I have received one letter, dated 26 January 1994, from the Leaders of Cardiff city council and Vale of Glamorgan borough council stating that they support "the proposals as outlined in the Bill".

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specific representations he has received opposing the inclusion of Llanelly in the proposed new unitary authority of Powys; and when each representation was made.

Mr. Redwood: Since publication of the Local Government (Wales) Bill, I have received the following specific representations opposing the inclusion of Llanelly in the proposed Powys unitary authority:

Cllr. Bernard Assinder, leader of Blaenau Gwent borough council – December 1993
Cllr. Bernard Assinder, leader of Blaenau Gwent borough council – January 1994
Cllr. Bernard Assinder, leader of Blaenau Gwent borough council – March 1994
Cllr. Bernard Assinder, leader of Blaenau Gwent borough council – March 1994
Cllr. Bernard Assinder, leader of Blaenau Gwent borough council – April 1994
Llanelly community council – December 1993
Monmouth Conservative Association – March 1994

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 625, if he will cite the precise reference and form of words in the representation he has received from Cardiff city council which indicates the authority favouring the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed new unitary authority of Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: In a joint letter to me dated 26 January 1994, the Leaders of Cardiff city council and Vale of Glamorgan borough council said

"We would, therefore, wish to re-affirm our support for the proposals as outlined in the Bill. The proposed new unitary authorities present by far the best solution for the people of our areas, best for the people of the wider region and best for the local government in Wales."

HOUSE OF COMMONS

"A History of Salford Mining"

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Lancashire artists, "A History of Salford Mining", to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 11 July to Friday 15 July.

Ministerial Memoirs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the provision of compensation for Ministers who resign from office or are dismissed commenced; what factors occasioned it; how often it has been refused by any ex-Minister since 1979; and what representations he has received arguing that ex-Ministers should not publish memoirs of their time in office for a given period after leaving office.

Mr. Newton: Severance payments were introduced for Ministers in the House of Lords by section 13 of Parliamentary Pensions Act 1984, and extended to those in the House of Commons by the Ministerial and Other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991. These payments were introduced following recommendations by the Top Salaries Review Body; Reports No. 20, Cmnd 8881 of May 1983, and No. 26, Cm 362 of May 1988 respectively. They compensate for the abrupt loss of earnings which Ministers face immediately on leaving office. I am not aware of a severance payment ever having been refused. I have received no representations proposing a moratorium on the memoirs of ex-Ministers.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many statutory instruments were (a) made by Ministers and (b) approved by Parliament in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993.

Mr. Newton: In 1992, there were a total of 3,359 statutory instruments made by Ministers; of these, 127 were laid before the House and approved. In 1993, the figures were 3,279 and 172 respectively.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Management Systems

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much his Department's computer-aided facilities management systems cost; from whom they were purchased; how many person hours were required to commission them; what the estimated and actual saving has been from their operation; and to what extent the use of such systems accounts for the apparent rise in theft noted in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) of 16 February, Official Report, column 774.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has no computer-aided facilities management systems.

As to theft, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 16 February, which records that no equipment has been stolen from the Privy Council Office in the last three years.

Correspondence

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many letters were received from, and written to, hon. Members by him in February.

Mr. Newton: I received 23 letters from hon. Members in February and wrote to 16.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Households

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the number of households comprising individuals of pensionable age (a) living alone and (b) living with another individual or individuals also of pensionable age.

Mr Hague: In 1990-91—the latest year for which information is available—an estimated 3·34 million persons over pension age lived in households alone and 2·12 million households comprised persons over pension age living with one or more others over pension age.

These estimates derive from the 1990-91 family expenditure survey.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information technology consultants his Department has employed, for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Hague: The Department has employed IT consultants and contractors over the past five years to assist the permanent civil service IT specialists to provide IT services to the DSS group, Northern Ireland Social Security Agency, the Employment Service and Department of Health. All aspects of IT are covered including business analysis, development, implementation and service delivery.

Details of these services, including expenditure for IT consultants and contractors, are in the table.

Year	Number of consultants	Number of contractors	Cost
1988-89	[1]—	[1]—	47,730,354
1989-90	493	131	40,907,144
1990-91	553	293	78,094,010

Carers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the proportion of the total social security budget which will be spent on the invalid care allowance and the carer premium in 1993-94.

Mr. Scott: Invalid care allowance represents 0·53 per cent. of the total social security budget, excluding administration costs, for 1993-94.

Carer premium is not a benefit in its own right, but is a factor in the calculation of the income-related benefits—income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit. Reliable data on expenditure on carer premium alone are not available for 1993-94.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of national average earnings the current level of invalid care allowance represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In April 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, invalid care allowance represented 10·6 per cent. of national average earnings.

It provides a measure of income maintenance and is not intended to be a wage for carers.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current annual cost of benefits for carers.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to estimate the full cost of benefits which a carer may receive. Planned expenditure on invalid care allowance, which is specifically intended for carers, is £510 million for 1994-95.

Source: Departmental Report 1994.

War Pensions Agency

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the launch of a War Pensions Agency.

Mr. Hague: The War Pensions Agency has been formally launched today. The agency has developed a charter standard statement and a framework document which are both published today. I have arranged for these papers to be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has made of the effect of the removal of child benefit and additional income support from a full-time student on his or her 19th birthday.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 15 March, at columns 628-29.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments have been made in (a) Doncaster, (b) Barnsley, (c) Rotherham and (d) Sheffield since October 1993.

Mr. Scott: The administration of cold weather payments is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many cold weather payments have been made in Doncaster, Barnsley, Rotherham and Sheffield since October 1993.

The information you require is detailed in the table below.

Benefits Agency district	Number of cold weather payments made in the period 1 October 1993 to 30 March 1994
Barnsley	11,617
Doncaster	14,602
Rother and Dearne Valley	19,978
Sheffield East	20,270
Sheffield West	18,338

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many invalidity benefit awards for people in the Doncaster district of the Benefits Agency have been (a) reviewed, (b) disallowed and (c) reinstated on appeal in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) awards in Doncaster District.

The information is not available in the exact format requested. However, I have provided such information as is available in appendix 1.

The information provided, with regard to IVB awards disallowed, represents only those disallowed on review and does not include those disallowed at the start of the claim. To obtain those figures would incur disproportionate cost.

The statistics provided are taken from clerical records maintained in the Doncaster District offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications there have been for invalidity benefit in the last 12 months in the Doncaster district of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about applications for Invalidity Benefit in Doncaster.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because, although Benefits Agency Districts record overall claims to incapacity benefits, claims to Sickness Benefit (SB) and Invalidity Benefit (IVB) are not recorded separately. Separate figures for SB and IVB could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Statistics are maintained however, to provide information regarding the total numbers of applications for SB/IVB received in each Benefits Agency District.

Between 1 March 1993 and 28 February 1994 there were 8,508 such applications received in the Doncaster District.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number of people in the Doncaster district have been in receipt of invalidity benefit in each month over the last two years.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Kevin Hughes, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about Invalidity Benefit recipients in Doncaster.

I have provided the information you requested at appendix 1. The figures will include a small number of people who have claimed but are not receiving Invalidity Benefit because they are in receipt of a higher overlapping benefit.

The statistics provided were obtained from a clerical count of cases within the Benefits Agency offices of the Doncaster District.

War Pensioners (Deafness)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received regarding audiological hearing tests for war pensioners in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what changes have been made in the method of dealing with war pensioners' deafness claims in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Peter L. Pike, dated 12 April 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about War Pensions claims for deafness.

Claims for a War Pension in respect of deafness caused or made worse by service invariably require an audiometric test to be carried out to establish the extent of any hearing loss.

To improve the service provided to those making such claims, the procedure of audiometric testing was changed in June 1993.

At that time a contract was signed by General Healthcare Group PLC (trading as BMI Healthcare (Audiology Services)) to provide audiometric tests. BMI began arranging some tests from July 1993 and assumed responsibility for all such tests from August 1993.

Throughout this change all those involved previously in providing tests were kept informed. There was also an exchange of correspondence which dealt with representations made by the two main recognised professional bodies in this field—British Association of Audiological Technicians Ltd and the British Association of Audiological Scientists.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been submitted in the Seaham and Peterlee areas for assessment of chronic bronchitis and emphysema; how many have been successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The administration of industrial injuries disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. John Cummings, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the number of claims submitted in the Seaham and Peterlee areas for assessment of chronic bronchitis and emphysema and how many have been successful.

Firstly, I would like to explain that there are two stages to the take on of claims for prescribed disease D12 (known as chronic bronchitis and emphysema), for which industrial injuries disablement benefit has been available since 13 September 1993 for people who have worked for at least 20 years underground in a coal mine.

Stage 1 was restricted to claims from people who were aged 70 or over on 13 September 1993 or had an award of higher rate Disability Living Allowance care component or higher rate Attendance Allowance. Stage 1 ended on 28 February 1994; stage 2 commenced from 1 March and is open to anybody to claim. All claims are considered for payment from 13 September 1993.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because statistics are not available for specific areas but for Benefits Agency Districts. I have therefore supplied information for the Benefits Agency's North Durham District which covers the Seaham and Peterlee areas as well as Durham, Chester-le-Street and Stanley.

As at 27 March 1994 the number of claims for chronic bronchitis and emphysema received by the North Durham District Office was 2,646. This is in respect of both stage 1 and 2 of the take-on of claims. Not all of the claims have been processed yet but of those that have, 186 have been successful and have resulted in an award of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Compensation Claims

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of claims notified to the compensation recovery unit for the years 1991, 1992 and 1993; in how many cases in each year no recovery was made because the claim had a value of less than £2,500; and what was the total amount recovered in each year.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the number of claims notified to the Compensation Recovery Unit, the number of cases settled below the Small Payment Limit of £2,500, and the total amount recovered in each of the years 1991, 1992 and 1993.

The information requested is produced below for each financial year.

The number of claims notified to the Compensation Recovery Unit and the total amounts recovered are as follows:

Period	Claims notified	Amount recovered £ million
1 April 1991—31 March 1992	121,657	25·3
1 April 1992—31 March 1993	158,996	51·3
1 April 1993—31 March 1994	188,708	81·9

Compensators are not obliged to notify the Compensation Recovery Unit if the compensation award is settled at or below the Small Payment Limit. Of those notified 91,419 cases were settled at or below the Small Payment Limit between 1 January 1989 and 31 March 1993. For the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 the number of cases notified were 48,655.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Benefits Office, Highgate

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans there are for the Benefits Agency to relocate the Highgate benefits office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The relocation of the Benefits Agency office in Highgate is an operational matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 12 April 1994:

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about plans to relocate the Benefits Agency office in Highgate.

You will already be aware of the poor condition and design of the premises that house the Highgate office which have necessitated the need to relocate the office. We have identified suitable alternative accommodation at 1A Elthorne Road London N19. The main work to refurbish these premises began on 31 January 1994 and the projected completion, including the installation of computer cabling, is expected by 7 October 1994. The intention will be to open to the public around 14 November but this may be subject to revision. Until that date customers will continue to be served from the existing premises in Archway Tower.

The move from a very poor and inadequate building to modern office accommodation will provide improved quality services for customers and staff alike. It will mean increased privacy for customers, and improved access and service for people with disabilities and customers with children.

The Manager, Steve Watson, Euston District, PO Box 1933, London NW1 2ED will be happy to provide you with any further information or progress reports should you require them.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Indonesia

16. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions there are on trade with Indonesia.

Mr. Needham: There are no major restrictions on trade with Indonesia. Some products require licences for export to Indonesia, and there are quota restrictions on imports of textiles and clothing into the EU. However, as a result of the successful completion of the GATT Uruguay round textile and clothing quotas will be phased out over a 10-year period under the ending of the multi-fibre arrangement. Indonesia's high tariffs will also be reduced.

Embassies (Advice to Business Men)

22. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent initiatives he has taken to improve the standard of advice given to British business men via Her Majesty's embassies overseas.

Mr. Needham: I am in regular contact with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs about commercial work undertaken by FCO posts abroad. They are an integral part of our overseas trade services network. Recent initiatives, including the establishment of business links, the recruitment of export promoters and the preparation of market plans for our top 80 markets share the common objective of enhancing the standards of every part of the overseas trade services.

Aerospace Industry

24. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received since last December's GATT settlement from the aerospace industry.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Trade and Industry has been in regular contact with the United Kingdom aerospace industry, both with individual companies and through the Society of British Aerospace Companies, about the continuing negotiations on a new GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

25. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have utilised the small firms loan guarantee scheme in the year following the changes made to the scheme in the 1993 March Budget; and what is the total sum guaranteed under that scheme during that period.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 3,886 loans at a value of £155·01 million have been guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in the year to 31 March 1994. This compares to 2,342 loans at a value of £52·01 million in the previous year.

Exports (Stimulation)

26. Mr. Hayes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to stimulate local events to promote United Kingdom exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: To assist British companies to compete in world markets my right hon. Friend has created business links giving local access to a wide range of business advice and support services. In addition, numerous export-related events are sponsored by my Department across the country. The current language campaign, with more than 70 local events and initiatives from this week onwards throughout the United Kingdom and a special BBC television programme, is one example.

National Consumer Council

27. Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the effect on the service to consumers of the reduction in the funding of the National Consumer Council.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am confident the National Consumer Council will continue to promote and safeguard the interests of consumers, taking into account the revised level of grant in aid.

Local Markets

28. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the effect of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill on local markets.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has received some 120 representations from individuals, local authorities, trade associations and businesses on the Government's proposals to deregulate market franchise rights, of which 16 express support. Many of those who oppose the proposal do so under the misapprehension that it will abolish the right of local authorities to continue to hold markets and collect rents. Clauses 21 to 23 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill would remove rights of local authorities with market franchises to object to proposals to set up competing markets within six and two thirds of a mile of their own. Other opponents believe that removing market franchise rights will remove controls over other markets which may cause a local nuisance. Market franchise rights can only be used against rival markets held on the same day as the franchise market or where, if not held on the same day, it can be demonstrated that the owner of the franchise has suffered actual loss. A range of powers is available to local authorities to control any undesirable consequences arising from other markets.

Exports and Inward Investment

29. Mr. Riddick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met business representatives to discuss exports and inward investment.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend frequently has meetings with members of the United Kingdom business community which involve discussions concerning exports and inward investment.

Shipbuilding Industry

30. Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to support the shipbuilding industry.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department's sponsorship divisions maintain close contact with our shipbuilding industry. We provide the industry with assistance from the shipbuilding intervention fund and the home credit guarantee scheme. We provide the maximum level of support permitted by the seventh directive on aid to shipbuilding.

Institute of Directors

31. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Institute of Directors to discuss matters affecting business including inward investment.

Mr. Heseltine: I have regular contact with the Institute of Directors to discuss matters affecting business.

Assisted Areas

32. Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the new map for objective 5b areas in England.

Mr. Heseltine: I consider it to be generally very satisfactory. The Government negotiated a trebling of England's objective 5(b) coverage, to 1·7 million people.

I am particularly pleased that the Government secured designation of the whole of Cornwall. Newly eligible areas include large parts of Devon, parts of Somerset, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, Staffordshire, Derbyshire and Lancashire, and large parts of Lincolnshire, North Yorkshire, Northumberland and Cumbria. New areas in Shropshire and Hereford and Worcester now complement those retained in rural Wales and a new area in Clwyd.

Personal Pensions

33. Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the level of provisions required by insurance companies to meet the compensation arising from the mis-selling of personal pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department has written to life offices asking for an indication of their likely exposure to compensation in respect of mis-selling of personal pensions, and providing guidance on how the Department expects them to reserve for any such exposure in future Companies Act accounts and DTI returns. Individual responses must remain confidential as between the life offices and the Department, but where a life office considers that it is likely to have a liability, or a contingent liability, in respect of mis-selling of pension business, the Department expects this to be recognised in the published accounts. The Securities and Investments Board is seeking to determine the extent of mis-selling and the position will not be clear until that review is completed later in the year. It would be wrong to conclude, therefore, at this stage that evidence of procedural defects necessarily implies that the advice given by financial advisers was bad.

Commercial Debt

34. Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the issue of late payment of commercial debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has continued to receive representations from a variety of organisations and individuals proposing responses to the problem of late payment.

On 30 November 1993, the Department of Trade and Industry published a consultation paper, "Late Payment of Commercial Debt", to seek the views of the business community on possible options to address the problem of late payment, including legislation for a statutory right to interest and a British Standard for prompt payment.

Responses to the paper were required by 31 March 1994. More than 340 responses have been received and are now under consideration.

Small Firms

35. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from industry about the availability of finance for the growth and development of small firms.

Mr. McLoughlin: We regularly meet representatives from industry and we receive many suggestions as to how small firms can be helped to obtain the finance that they need.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his report to Parliament on the status of small and medium-sized enterprises in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department plans to publish the report small firms in Britain 1994 in June. A copy will be sent to individual hon. Members and a copy placed in the Library of the House.

Utility Regulators

36. Mr. Enright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review the power of the utility regulators to limit charges and boardroom salary increases.

Mr. McLoughlin: The utility regulators have sufficient powers to protect consumers' interests over a range of issues including prices. The remuneration of company directors is a matter for the company concerned and its shareholders.

Postal Services (Privatisation)

37. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received on the subject of the privatisation of postal services in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Around 280 letters have been received on the subject in my Department since 1 April 1993 from hon. Members, interested parties and members of the public. A wide range of views have been expressed.

Companies House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effects of full or partial privatisation of Companies House on employees' pension and redundancy rights.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Any assessment would be premature in advance of a decision in principle on the future of Companies House. No such decision has yet been taken.

Nuclear Energy Review

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the timetable and terms of reference of the nuclear energy review.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, columns 759-60.

VAT Registration, North West

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many businesses registered and deregistered for value added tax in (a) Pendle and (b) the north-west in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The figures for 1992 are as follows:

	Registrations	De-registrations
North West (Standard Region)	19,262	22,791
Pendle	254	284

Figures are not available for 1993.

Shareholders and Creditors (Class Actions)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce proposals for legislation under which shareholders and creditors would be able to bring class actions against the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to seek to change the present state of the law.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information plc auditors are required to file with the recognised supervisory bodies in relation to their own affairs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All registered auditors must provide their supervisory body each year with information relating to the following matters so that the bodies may discharge their statutory duties as set out in part II of schedule 11 to the Companies Act 1989:

—the holding of an appropriate qualification;
—being a fit and proper person(s);
—professional integrity and independence;
—the technical standards applied to company audit work;
—the maintenance of competence;
—the monitoring and enforcement of compliance with the supervisory body's rules;
—eligibility for membership of the supervisory body;
—the ability to meet claims arising out of company audit work;
—the maintenance of the public register for company auditors by the supervisory body.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) individual auditors and (b) auditing firms are registered with each of the authorised bodies under the provisions of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The latest available figures for those registered with the recognised supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989 are as follows:

Supervisory body	Individuals	Firms
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	19,473	9,218
Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland	1,273	742
Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland	829	463
Chartered Association of Certified Accountants	3,959	507
Association of Authorised Public Accountants	460	425

Audit Failures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many instances of audit failures he has referred to any accountancy body; and what was the outcome of each referral.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the annual reports of the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors for the years ended 30 September 1992 and 1993 respectively, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Yorkshire Rider Bus Company

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the proposed takeover of the Yorkshire Rider Bus Company by Badgerline.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received representations from the hon. Member. In addition, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House to a question raised by the former hon. Member for Bradford, South, Bob Cryer, on 24 March, Official Report, column 424. While the Director General of Fair Trading is still considering the proposed acquisition, all representations about it should be made direct to him.

Deregulation

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will estimate the number of newsagents who are expected to go out of business following the current deregulation proposals;

(2) if he will estimate the number of school children who will lose their delivery jobs following the current deregulation proposals.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Statutory consultation on the provisions of an order under the Fair Trading Act 1973, in relation to the wholesale supply of national newspapers to retailers in England and Wales, ended on 31 March.

The proposed order, which follows a Monopolies and Mergers Commission report, would prohibit wholesalers from refusing to supply retailers on the grounds that an area is already adequately served; placing restrictions on the point of sale; preventing retailers from selling newspapers on to other retailers. I am prepared to consider as an alternative to an order any industry-led solutions that could lead to a substantial increase in competition comparable to that which would be achieved by an order. Until I have had a chance to consider fully the representations I have received I cannot say what precise form the changes I intend to introduce will take. Therefore, I would not wish to speculate about the potential impact of reform.

Exports (Declaration of Interest)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance is given to (a) members of the Export Credit Advisory Council and (b) the British Overseas Projects Board on declarations of interest; what such declarations have been made; and in what form such declarations are recorded.

Mr. Needham: When members of the Export Credits Advisory Council are appointed, they are required to provide a list of their business interests and directorships to the Export Credits Guarantee Department on a confidential basis. These lists are updated from time to time as necessary and maintained by ECGD. Members are also required to declare where they have an interest when advising ECGD on particular issues.

As a condition of service, Overseas Projects Board members are asked to declare their financial interests, including their directorships, to the Department of Trade and Industry and to keep the Department informed of any changes. This information is retained on file by the DTI's Overseas Projects Board secretariat and held in strict confidence.

Companies Acts (Investigations)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many investigators and inspectors appointed under the Companies Acts have declared an interest in the matters of companies under investigation in the years since 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department would not appoint a particular inspector or investigator if there was a known conflict of interest. If a possible conflict arose during the course of an investigation, officials would discuss with the appointee the appropriate course of action. Instances of this occurring are very infrequent.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what interests relevant to terms covered in the report on the affairs of Astra plc were declared by the inspectors investigating the affairs of the company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors disclosed no interests which conflicted with their appointment to investigate and report on the affairs of Astra Holdings plc.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he or his officials have had with Lord Justice Scott regarding the ways in which the papers and documents submitted to his inquiry could be retained as a collection and made available to public scrutiny.

Mr. Needham: There was correspondence in February 1993 alerting the inquiry to the provisions of the Public Records Act.

Ice Cream

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make a statement on the effect on fair trade of the freezer monopoly in the ice cream industry;

(2) what advice is given to small and medium-sized ice cream makers seeking to sell their products to high street retailers and corner shops; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the Wall's freezer monopoly in the ice cream industry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply in the United Kingdom of ice cream for immediate consumption was published on 29 March. The MMC has concluded that, although scale and complex monopoly situations exist in the industry, the practice of freezer exclusivity does not operate against the public interest. The Government have announced that, since the MMC have made no adverse findings, there is no action which can be taken on the report. Ice cream makers and retailers operate in a competitive environment and can choose how best to meet the needs of their customers.

European Funding

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that the Thanet travel-to-work area obtains the maximum possible European regional development funding and objective 2 funding for investment in infrastructure for central area initiative sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The Council regulations allow the member states three months from the date of the decision on eligibility, 20 January, to draw up and present to the Commission plans describing the uses to which it is intended to put the fund's grants. For this purpose the British objective 2 areas will comprise 13 plan areas. The plans are being prepared by Government Departments, with appropriate local consultation.

The Government have divided the indicative allocation, for the purposes of their plans, as follows:

Plan area	Million ecu (1994 prices)
North East England	308
West Cumbria	25
Yorkshire and Humberside	313
East Midlands	79
West Midlands	371
Greater Manchester/Lancashire/Cheshire	329
Greater London	74
Thanet	14
Plymouth	29
South Wales	188
Eastern Scotland	121
Strathclyde	286
Gibraltar	5
	2,142

The regulations allow a further six months to negotiate, on the basis of the plans presented, a Community support framework for each plan area. The frameworks will then govern the allocation and use of the fund's grants.

Only after the Community support frameworks have been negotiated and adopted can detailed decisions be taken on projects to receive grant.

Liquid Steel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will make a statement concerning the level of production of liquid steel in the European Union.

Mr. Heseltine: Crude steel production in the EC increased from 132·2 million tonnes in 1992 to 132·5 million tonnes in 1993.

Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has of the number of people who have paid for electricity in advance to avoid paying VAT on fuel bills.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that about 5 per cent. of electricity customers have made pre-payments.

Business Conditions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has received from (a) the Confederation of British Industry and (b) other business representatives regarding changes in business conditions in each quarter since April 1992.

Mr. Salisbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade regularly receives reports from the Confederation of British Industry and other business representatives regarding business conditions.

Export Share

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has received from companies on changes in the United Kingdom's share of (a) the European export market and (b) the Pacific rim countries.

Mr. Needham: The Department receives many reports from companies concerning their export successes. Examples of companies doing well in the export market are included in the "Overseas Trade Magazine", which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has received from companies in (a) the west midlands and (b) Coventry regarding their exports to (i) Europe and (ii) the Pacific rim.

Mr. Needham: My Department has regular contact with firms in the west midlands and recognises their export successes in Europe and the Pacific rim.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking to make companies aware of the implications of the Maastricht treaty; and what representations he has received from companies regarding the implications for business of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Needham: We have had a number of requests for information on Maastricht from industry. Up to now, we have responded on an individual basis. In early May, we shall issue a new DTI booklet entitled "The Single Market —Making it Work for You", which will include material on aspects of the Maastricht treaty.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from (a) individual companies in (i) the west midlands and (ii) Coventry, (b) the Confederation of British Industry and (c) local chambers of commerce, regarding the implications of GATT.

Mr. Needham: My Department has responded to a large number of inquiries from companies, trade associations and chambers of commerce about the results of the GATT Uruguay round.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the implications for the aerospace industry of the proposed GATT agreements; and when he expects the agreement relating to that sector to be reached.

Mr. Needham: Negotiations on a GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft are continuing. The Government's objective for these negotiations is to conclude an agreement which covers the whole aerospace sector, and which includes strict and balanced disciplines on direct and indirect government supports. On 14 December 1993, members of the GATT civil aircraft committee agreed that these negotiations would continue for a further year, ending in December 1994.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the projected end date for the BCCI receivership; and what is the estimated total fee for the services of Touche Ross.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: My Department is not aware of any estimate of the likely duration of the liquidation of BCCI. The fees of Touche Ross as liquidators are a matter for the court and the creditors.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the total income in the BCCI receivership is estimated will be absorbed by the fee to the receivers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: My Department does not have this information. It is a matter for the liquidators.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost of the BCCI receivership to 31 March.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The total payments from the English liquidation of BCCI to 15 January, the anniversary of the winding up order, are approximately £215 million.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what employment costs of former BCCI employees may become the liability of the receivers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: This is a matter for the liquidators.

Fire Safety

Mr. Alnger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to consult with the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association about changes in fire safety legislation prior to publication of proposed changes.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The Government will consult all interested parties before making any legislative changes. As part of their widespread consultations, the team undertaking the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement, announced by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade on 17 January, Official Report, column 381, met representatives of the association on 28 March to hear their views on this important issue.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association about fire safety legislation in the past six months.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: My Department solicited views from the association last year as part of the consultations on the review of the regulations on children's nightwear and foam-filled furniture. The consultation period expired at the end of October 1993, but the association did not respond.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the construction task force report on the future of fire safety.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The working papers of all seven business deregulation task forces—including those of the construction task force on fire safety—were placed in the Library of the House on Wednesday 30 March.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cryogenics

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution Her Majesty's Government make to the research and development of cryogenics by British industry and academic research institutions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government, through the Research Councils, support a range of research and development involving cryogenics. This includes support totalling £1 million per annum for research by university groups on low temperature physics and chemistry, and a £5 million programme supporting work on superconducting materials. The research councils also fund the development of superconducting magnets and cooling mechanisms for use in a range of scientific equipment, including synchrotron radiation, neutron beam and nuclear magnetic resonance equipment, and detectors for particle physics, astronomy and space research.

DEFENCE

RAF Carlisle

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement outlining Her Majesty's Government's response to the joint Whitley response to the equipment supply depot study consultation document on the future of No. 14 MU RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Hanley: My Department is currently considering the proposals contained in the RAF Carlisle joint Whitley response to the equipment supply depot rationalisation study, which was received on 28 March 1994. I shall be taking full account of all representations before coming to final decisions.

Greenham Common

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects, under the Crichel Down rules, to restore commoners' rights to those who previously held them at Greenham common.

Mr. Hanley: Crichel Down rules regulate the disposal of land where there are former owners with rights to re-purchase. The issue of commoners' rights attaching to land is a separate matter. It is my Department's view, based on legal advice, that the commoners' rights on Greenham common were extinguished when compensation moneys were handed over to the Committee of Commoners. My Department has no plans to restore commoners' rights there.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 14 April 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many charges were originally brought against Mr. Asil Nadir; and how many have been dismissed by the courts or withdrawn by the relevant authority.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Nadir was indicted on 58 counts of theft and eight counts of false accounting. None have been dismissed or withdrawn. He has yet to be tried.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many joint charges were originally brought against Mr. John Turner and Mr. Asil Nadir; how many have been dismissed by the courts or withdrawn by the relevant authority; and to whom and what amount of costs have been awarded.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Turner and Mr. Nadir were not jointly charged with any of the offences. Mr. Turner pleaded not guilty to the offences with which he was charged, verdicts of not guilty were entered by the court as the prosecution offered no evidence, and he was subsequently discharged. He obtained a defendant's costs order and I understand that his legal representatives have yet to submit their bill of costs for determination.

Northern Cyprus

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor met the President of the Republic of Northern Cyprus; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor met the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community on 6 May 1993. Mr. Denktash set out his views in relation to the political situation in Northern Cyprus. In addition, the position of Asil Nadir was discussed. The Lord Chancellor also met Mr. Denktash, together with the President of Cyprus, on 7 May 1993 at a function organised on the occasion of the Commonwealth law conference.

Child Witnesses

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are being taken by courts in Cleveland to protect child witnesses with particular reference to the use of screens, television link equipment, and pre-recorded interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Television links and video playback equipment are in place in the Crown court sitting at Teesside combined court centre. Screens are also available if required by both criminal and civil cases heard there. All magistrates courts in Cleveland have video playback equipment, and can arrange the provision of screens if necessary. Arrangements can be made for screens to be available for child witnesses at the family hearing centres at Hartlepool and Stockton county courts.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance has been issued to judges relating to wigs and gowns in court during proceedings of cases of alleged child abuse.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is no specific guidance issued to the judiciary relating to the wearing of wigs and gowns in cases of alleged child abuse. However judges have the discretion to remove wigs and gowns when they consider it appropriate.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which courts in Cleveland have child liaison officers to protect child witnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is a designated child liaison officer for every Crown court centre, including the one at Teesside combined court centre, in Cleveland.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, further to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 759, if he will make it his policy to collate information in the future on the number of cases in which judges have been asked to consider a public interest immunity certificate.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to collate information about applications to courts arising out of public interest immunity certificates.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the Acts of Parliament and consolidation Acts that affect local government that have been introduced by his Department since 1990.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has introduced 33 Acts of Parliament, including consolidation Acts, which have received Royal Assent since 1990. Of those, the following Acts contain specific references to local authorities:

- Capital Allowances Act 1990 (c.1)
- Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (c.8)
- Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 (c.9)
- Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990 (c.10)
- Planning (Consequential Provisions) Act 1990 (c.11)
- Water Industry Act 1991 (c.56)
- Water Resources Act 1991 (c.57)
- Land Drainage Act 1991 (c.59)
- Water Consolidation (Consequential Provisions) Act 1991 (c.60)
- Social Security Administration Act 1992 (c.5)
- Social Security (Consequential Provisions) Act 1992 (c.6)
- Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 (c.8)
- Social Security (Consequential Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 (c.9)
- Taxation of Chargeable Gains Act 1992 (c.12)
- Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)

Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993 (c.8)
Charities Act 1993 (c.10)
Clean Air Act 1993 (c.11)
Radioactive Substances Act 1993 (c.12)
Health Service Commissioners Act 1993 (c.46)
Probation Service Act 1993 (c.47)
Pension Schemes Act 1993 (c.48)
Pension Schemes (Northern Ireland) Act 1993 (c.49)
Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1993 (c.50)

Other Acts of Parliament introduced by the Lord Chancellor's Department may affect local government in the same way as other bodies and individuals may be affected.

ENVIRONMENT

Right to Buy

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council properties were sold in the Breckland district council area under the right to buy legislation in each year of its operation.

Sir George Young: Tables showing the available information on total right-to-buy sales for each English local authority and every financial year since 1980, with a cumulative total to December 1993, are in the Library.

In addition to some 2,500 dwellings sold under the right-to-buy legislation in Breckland district council since 1980, about 6,700 properties in full ownership were transferred from the authority to the Peddars Way housing association in March 1993, by way of large-scale voluntary transfer. Over the last 15 years, approximately 1,200 other voluntary sales were completed in Breckland; these are also shown in the tables.

Environmental Measures

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to support emerging environmental industries and clean processes in British business and industry.

Mr. Atkins: The Government already provide considerable support and encouragement to the development of the United Kingdom's emerging environmental industries. For example, my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry established the joint environmental markets unit in December 1992 to assist and encourage United Kingdom firms to exploit the expanding opportunities in the world market for environmental goods and services. A growing number of firms are now taking advantage of the unit's services.

The President of the Board of Trade announced on 7 December that the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment would jointly run a new environmental technology best practice programme. This will find and present to industry examples of how firms can reduce costs and pollution at one and the same time. The programme's main objective will be to encourage user companies to adopt environmentally favourable technology and best practice in environmental management. It will also encourage suppliers to develop such technology and techniques.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons funding for the environmental technology innovation scheme and the environmental management options scheme has been reduced.

Mr. Atkins: Both the environmental technology innovation scheme and the DTI's environmental management options scheme were three-year programmes which were open to grant applications between October 1990 and September 1993. Funding continues to be paid to on-going projects under the schemes and for disseminating their results.

The 1993 White Paper "Realising our potential: a Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology" highlighted the importance of the spread of best practice and the transfer and diffusion of technology. The new £16 million environmental technology best practice programme, which was announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 7 December, has been set up to take this forward and will build on the earlier two schemes.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent he considers that more stringent environmental regulations are necessary if British exports are to pass the environmental standards of other countries.

Mr. Atkins: A recent report commissioned by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry concluded that United Kingdom firms are in a good position to exploit the rapidly expanding world market for environmental goods and services. The United Kingdom environmental industry is very competitive internationally and a highly successful exporter for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage environmental technology in British industries that would produce less waste and use fewer natural resources.

Mr. Atkins: A new environmental technology best practice programme, run jointly by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry, was announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 7 December. It will make the best environmental technology and techniques more widely known to potential users and suppliers. The programme will have a strong emphasis on reducing waste at source, thereby making better use of natural resources.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to favour contractors with good environmental practices in its own purchases.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's procurement officers have already been provided with clear guidelines to integrate environmental factors into their buying requirements. This is in accordance with the Department's green housekeeping policy statement which was updated in March 1993 and the recently published green guide for suppliers of goods and services to the Department entitled: "Selling to DOE".

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that products purchased by the Government should be tested for energy and non-renewable resource implications.

Mr. Atkins: Decisions on purchasing are a matter for individual Departments. However, recent Treasury guidance states that specifications for goods and services should reflect the Department's environmental strategies while using competition and seeking best value for money.

My own Department has recently published a guide entitled "Selling to DOE" which, among, other things, informs suppliers of goods and services of our requirement for products which are energy efficient and made from recycled or renewable materials. The Department has also instructed its procurement officers to give preference to such products in accordance with our green housekeeping policy statement which was first published in 1992 and updated last spring.

My Department's energy efficiency office encourages Departments to improve all aspects of their energy efficiency, including purchasing, to assist them in achieving their target of improving their energy efficiency by 15 per cent. over five years.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to impose mandatory minimum standards on matters such as energy efficiency.

Mr. Atkins: Standards for the energy efficiency of new buildings already exist in the building regulations. The Government are in the process of revising the regulations which should lead to an improvement in energy efficiency of between 25 and 35 per cent. compared with the current provisions.

The Government also support the EC proposals for energy labelling and minimum standards of appliances, provided that they can be achieved without excessive costs to consumers and manufacturers. Regulations to implement a directive setting minimum standards for the efficiency of new boilers came into force on 1 January 1994. Minimum standards requirements for the efficiency of other heating appliances await the formulation of appropriate European standards under the construction products directive.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which environmental regulations on industry could improve their competitiveness while protecting natural resources.

Mr. Atkins: We keep under constant review both the effectiveness and the effects of existing and possible new environmental regulations, as well as alternatives to regulations.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of unallocated funds available under the single regeneration budget and the areas for which these funds are being considered.

Mr. Baldry: In the current financial year—1994-95—the funds available under the single regeneration budget will be taken up in meeting existing commitments from the programmes which have been brought together in the Budget.

In 1995-96, on current estimates, it is expected that about £100 million will be available to support new bids from local partnerships. The budget will be available throughout England. Guidance on bidding for these funds has been published by my Department today, 14 April. Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Library of the House.

Dartmoor National Park

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce his decision on the Dartmoor national park boundary variation order submitted to him by the Countryside Commission.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has today confirmed, with modifications, the order to vary the boundary of the Dartmoor national park. The Commission proposed 16 additions and 11 deletions, aimed at aligning the boundary with new trunk roads—the A30(T)—and the A38(T)—and adding small areas of common land which are subject to the Dartmoor Commons Act 1985. The modifications made to the order by my right hon. Friend retain two small areas proposed for deletion at Whistley Cottage and Cheriton Bishop. In the china clay area, land at Lee Moor will be deleted and at Shaugh Moor added, thereby retaining within the park those areas subject to the order which are presently unworked and whose landscape remains of national importance.

English Partnerships

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to issue guidance to English Partnerships, following his consultation last August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I am pleased to announce that, following careful consideration of over 200 responses to the consultation draft, my right hon. Friend has today issued guidance to English Partnerships. Copies are available in the Library of the House. English Partnerships is required to have regard to this guidance in deciding which land is suitable for regeneration or development; which function it is to exercise for securing the regeneration or development of any particular land; and how it is to exercise those functions. The guidance will be kept under review and can be amended later if necessary.

Housing Stock

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities are considering the large-scale voluntary transfer of housing stock.

Sir George Young [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The following 12 authorities are included in the 1994-95 programme for large-scale voluntary transfers—LSVTs: Basingstoke and Deane borough council Castle Point borough council Cherwell district council Maldon district council Malvern Hills district council Mid Bedfordshire district council North Dorset district council Penwith district council Thanet district council Vale of White Horse district council Walsall metropolitan borough council and Wychavon district council.

We encourage all authorities to consider the possibility of transfer, but it is for individual councils together with their tenants to decide whether to pursue this option. I understand that a number of authorities are considering applying for places on the 1995-96 programme. We are likely to invite applications in the autumn and I hope to announce the names of successful applicants by the end of the year.

TRANSPORT

Drivers' Sleep Requirements

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he has issued as to the minimum sleep requirements within 24-hour and seven-day periods for (a) airline pilots, (b) train drivers, (c) lorry drivers and (d) coach drivers.

Mr. Key: The Air Navigation Order 1989 requires that no member of an aircraft crew shall fly, nor shall an operator require him to fly, if either has reason to believe that he is suffering, or likely to suffer while flying, from fatigue which may endanger the safety of the aircraft or its occupants. Aircraft operators are also required to establish a scheme for the regulation of flight times for aircrews. Such schemes need to be approved by the Civil Aviation Authority.

The CAA's civil aviation publication 317 "The Avoidance of Fatigue in Aircrews" gives guidance on requirements for operator's flight time limitation schemes. Flight time limitation schemes do not set out minimum sleep requirements but specify maximum duty periods and minimum rests periods. The actual working of the schemes are complex but, in general, the maximum duty hours for aircrew should not exceed 55 hours in one week.

The Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulation 1994 places a duty on all railway employers to prevent employees with key safety responsibilities from working excessive hours. The Health and Safety Executive's non-statutory guidance recommends that train drivers should under normal circumstances have a minimum rest period of at least 11 consecutive hours per 24-hour period. Further guidance will be given in a statutory approved code of practice to be produced by the Health and Safety Executive by March 1995.

For most heavy goods vehicle drivers and about half bus and coach drivers Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3820/85 on drivers' hours limits driving hours—nine hours a day which may be increased to 10 hours twice a week—breaks —a break or breaks totalling 45 minutes must be taken during or after 4·5 hours of driving—and rest periods—11 consecutive hours daily rest, reducible to nine hours three times a week, and 45 consecutive hours weekly rest, reducible to 36 hours or 24 hours away from base.

The remainder, which include drivers of vehicles used for the carriage of passengers on a regular service of not more than 50 km are exempt from EC regulations and are subject to domestic drivers' hours rules.

The domestic rules for heavy goods vehicles limit the daily driving period of 10 hours and a maximum working day/duty time to 11 hours. The domestic rules for public service vehicles differ from those for HGVs. The daily driving period of 10 hours per day is the same, but the maximum working day/duty time is 16 hours. There is also a 5·5 hour limit on continuous driving and a 10 hour daily rest requirement.

Booklets providing guidance on the regulations for both lorry and coach drivers are available from local traffic area offices.

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the contracts currently being worked on for his Department by Coopers and Lybrand, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse, KPMG Peat Marwick, Grant Thornton, Binder Hamlyn, Robson Rhodes, Levy Gee, Hacker Young, Pannell Kerr Forster and Stoy Hayward.

Mr. Norris: The following of the firms referred to are carrying out contracts for the Department.

Coopers and Lybrand

Birmingham Northern Relief Road—financial advice.

Advice on possible sale of vehicle records database.

Review of Department's motorway communication maintenance contracts.

Ernst and Young

Advice on the use of project management systems in connection with the privatisation of British Rail.

Development of a commercial accounting system for the Coast Guard Agency.

Price Waterhouse

Advice on Design Build Finance and Operate contracts and longer term private finance options associated with motorway charging (jointly with Hambros Bank).

Sale of London Buses Limited subsidiaries.

Sale of the Trust Ports.

Royal train audit.

KPMG Peat Marwick

Commission to examine the business case for establishing a database of lighting on trunk roads and motorways.

Scoping study to determine availability of time-cost systems on the market for highways and project management.

Accountancy and taxation advice in connection with Rail privatisation.

Grant audit of London Transport.

Development of software—Routine Maintenance Management system (RMMS).

Development of software—UK Pavement Management System (UKPMS).

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the rules governing the independent evaluation of the environmental assessment of the channel tunnel rail link, giving the criteria against which any such evaluation is to be judged.

Mr. Freeman: The environmental assessment rules for Bills authorising works are contained in Standing Order No. 27A. Where, as in the case of the new channel tunnel rail link, an environmental statement is required, it must be deposited by the promoter soon after the Bill. It must contain all the information set out in the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, which are based on the requirements of EC Directive 85/337.

The environmental statement for the new channel tunnel rail link is being prepared for Union Railways by Environmental Resources Management and other specialist consultants. As part of a review for the Government of Union Railway's route development methodology in 1992-93, W. S. Atkins examined and endorsed the approach to environmental assessment. Further reviews in relation to the route have not been considered necessary. It will be for Parliament, and the Bill Select Committee in particular, to scrutinise the environmental statement, with the benefit of submissions by petitioners and the promoter.

Thames Riverbus Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost to public funds of the riverbus service on the River Thames during the period of its operation.

Mr. Norris: In 1989, a grant payment of £500,000 was made to the River Bus partnership by the Departments of Transport and of the Environment towards promotion and improvement of the service, conditional upon private sector investment of up to £2 million from five private sector developers, headed by Olympia and York. No other public funds were awarded and the service continued to operate at a loss, despite heavy subsidy from the private sector, until its demise in August 1993. Further contributions from public funds could not have been justified, as in transport terms the service represented poor value for money.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy at the next European Transport Council to press for the admission to the standing working group on the transport of radioactive materials of non-governmental organisations as observers.

Mr. Norris: No. The standing working group, set up at the request of the European Parliament in 1982 and administered by the Directorate-General for Energy—DG XVII—already has the power to invite non-governmental representatives to its meetings.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions met the President of the Republic of Northern Cyprus either in her present capacity or when head of the Serious Fraud Office; and what subjects were discussed.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has never met the President of the Republic of Northern Cyprus.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the existing assessments were reduced as a result of the child support formula changes on 7 February; how many absent parents were entitled to type A transitional protection before 7 February; how many absent parents have applied for type B transitional protection since 7 February; how many of these applications have been processed to date; and how many of these qualified for the new transitional protection.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 13 April 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Services about the impact of the policy changes to Child Support introduced on 7 February.

As a result of the formula changes around 37% of eligible assessments were reduced.

At 30 March, 2,226 absent parents whose maintenance liability had been assessed prior to 7 February 1993 had applied for transitional protection under the new arrangements, and over 1,900 cases had been processed. Of these transitional protection had been awarded to 840 absent parents. In addition, absent parents whose maintenance is assessed on or after 7 February have automatically been considered for transitional protection under the new arrangements.

Figures are not available on the number of absent parents entitled to type A transitional protection prior to 7 February.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Lone Parents

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in receipt of income support and maintenance are subject to the diversion procedure; and what proportion of maintenance orders in favour of lone parents on income support are subject to this procedure.

Mr. Burt: The total number of income support cases subject to diversion procedure is 60,927. Of these, 46,370 are lone parents with children whose cases are awaiting the completion of a maintenance assessment by the Child Support Agency. Statistics on the proportion of lone parents on income support whose maintenance orders are subject to the diversion procedure are not kept.

Family Credit Payments

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the money saved from (a) reduced housing benefit payments and (b) reduced council tax payments arising out of the family credit payments in respect of child care for working mothers.

Mr. Burt: Payments to all those already in work who begin to use the new earnings disregard in respect of child care costs will increase by an estimated £30 million in housing benefit and £5 million in council tax benefit in a full year at 1994-95 prices. Payments to the estimated 50,000 who commence work because of the introduction of the disregard will be reduced by an estimated £45 million in housing benefit and £10 million in council tax benefit.

Income Support

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average cost to the Exchequer of income support to each successful applicant.

Mr. Burt: The information is in table 2.1 of the May 1993 "Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry", a copy of which is in the Library.

Child Abuse

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the terms of reference of the research into the Benefits Agency service delivery to 16 and 17-year-olds carried out by the child abuse studies unit of London university; what were its main findings; if he will place a copy of the final report in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The report by the child abuse studies unit of London university into service delivery to 16 to 17-year-olds is an operational matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 13 April 1994;

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the report by the Child Abuse Studies Unit of London University into service delivery to 16 and 17 year olds.

The report to which you refer was not commissioned as a research document, but as an internal consultancy exercise looking at ways of improving service to this group of customers, and as such the Benefits Agency does not intend to publish the document.

The terms of reference were to investigate the standard of service delivery, identify good practices and areas of concern, establish an understanding of the needs of 16 and 17 year olds, identify the level of knowledge and information needs of advice workers, assess training needs of Benefits Agency staff, and evaluate pre/post claim information.

The report made a number of recommendations under headings such as Training, Publicity, Local Practice and Payment. Many of these recommendations refer to good practices to adopt when dealing with claims from young people. Guidance to staff in Benefits Agency District Offices is in the form of a Handbook called "Income Support for 16/17 year olds" and contains a section on good practices. This Handbook has been revised recently and where possible the recommendations from this report have been incorporated in the revised Handbook. The revised version has been in District Offices since mid-March 1994. A copy of the Handbook is already in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Cold Weather Payments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many severe weather payments have been made in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole since November 1993.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the cold weather payment scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tony Laurance to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 13 April 1994.

As Michael Bichard is on sick leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in which you asked how many Cold Weather Payments had been made in Greenock and Port Glasgow, Strathclyde, and Scotland as a whole since November 1993.

Details on Cold Weather Payments made are available for each Benefit Agency District. The attached appendix gives details for the Clyde Coast and Cowal District which comprises the Greenock and Port Glasgow branch offices. As there is no single Benefit Agency District covering Strathclyde I supplied the details for the Districts that fall within the Scotland and Northern Benefit Agency Area Directorate.

I hope my reply has been helpful.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Temazepam

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the incidence of criminal activity involving the drug Temazepam.

Mr. Maclean: We have received two letters this year from Members of Parliament concerning criminal activity committed by people under the influence of the drug Temazepam. Both letters were from hon. Members representing constituencies in the north-east, and were prompted by the tragic murder of Sgt. Bill Forth on Tyneside.

Correspondence

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside, concerning the case of Anthony O'Kere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I wrote to the hon. Member on 31 March 1994.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the hon. Members who have written to him concerning the case of John Kamara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Mr. Kamara maintains that he was wrongfully convicted in 1981 of murder and robbery. One hundred and four hon. Members and others have since written on his behalf. All of the matters raised in representations received have been carefully considered, but no grounds have come to light which would justify any action by my right hon. and learned Friend in respect of Mr. Kamara's conviction.

Racial Attacks

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racially motivated attacks have occurred in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information available centrally relates to reported racial incidents, rather than racial attacks, as defined by the Association of Chief Police Officers. Figures for Merseyside are given in the table. Information for Liverpool is not collected centrally.

Number of racial incidents in Merseyside

Year	Number of incidents
1988	136
1989	123
1990	144
1991	162
1992	134

ACPO definition: Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motive, or any incidents which include allegations of racial motivation made by any person.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to combat racially motivated crimes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 3 March 1994 at column 821-22 for details of the practical steps being taken by the Government to combat racial violence. Since then, the Secretary of State has tabled an amendment to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill to make section 19 of the Public Order Act 1986—publication or distribution of written material intended or likely to stir up racial hatred—an arrestable offence. The Government are also studying ways to deal with persistent harassment. Any further steps will be taken in the light of the report of the Home Affairs Committee inquiry into racial attacks and harassment when it is published.

Prison Service

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Prison Service will publish its next corporate plan.

Mr. Howard: The Prison Service has published its corporate plan for 1994-97. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Animal Experiments

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which species of octopus are being used for scientific procedures in Great Britain which might cause pain or lasting harm.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer to my reply to the previous question from the hon. Member for Dundee, East on 11 March at column 415. Octopus vulgaris were included within the provisions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 from 1 October 1993. Information on any scientific use of this species during the remainder of 1993 will be included in the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals 1993" to be published later this year.

Project licence authority is not required for the use of other octopus species in scientific procedures, and information about such use is not collected.

Special Constables

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total annual budget for special constables in England and Wales in each year since 1979;

(2) what was the total annual budget for special constables for each constabulary in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not centrally available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Each police force has its own special constabulary which is funded centrally through the police grant. There is no separate financial provision for special constables, and such budgetary information is not centrally collected.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many special constables were on establishment in England and Wales in each year since 1979;

(2) how many special constables were on establishment in England and Wales in each constabulary in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Special constables are not included in the assessment of police establishments. They are usually recruited on a divisional basis to supplement the numbers of regular officers, although there is currently a national campaign to encourage members of the public to volunteer.

Available statistics for the number of volunteers serving in special constabularies in England and Wales in 1980-1993 are given in table A. Figures for 1979 are not available.

The figures provided by individual constabularies for the years 1989-1993 are given in table B.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what changes he proposes to (a) the duties and (b) the powers of special constables;

(2) how the duties and powers of special constables have altered over the past 10 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The deployment of special constables and the duties to which they may be assigned always has been, and continues to be, an operational decision for which chief officers are responsible and which varies according to local circumstances and the training, experience and preferences of the special constables concerned. No changes have been made to the powers of special constables over the past 10 years: nor are any changes currently being contemplated.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours were worked by special constables (a) per week and (b) per month in (i) 1992, (ii) 1993 and (iii) 1985.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not centrally available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Evidence on Commission

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will evaluate for use in England and Wales the system for allowing children to give evidence on commission, as used in Scotland.

Mr. Maclean: We intend to consider the adequacy of current legislative provisions relating to the evidence of children in criminal proceedings when the findings of Professor Graham Davies' research become available at the end of this year. As part of that consideration we shall certainly take into account the early experience of the Scottish courts in taking evidence from children on commission.

Pagans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Prison Service Chaplaincy has for publishing a section on pagans in its Directory and Guide on Religious Practice; and what are the reasons for this decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. David Alton, dated 14 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about plans to publish a section on paganism in the Prison Service Directory and Guide on Religious Practice.

There are currently no plans to include a section on paganism in the Directory and Guide, although consultation is taking place to obtain more information on such groups and their beliefs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Parcelforce and Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many working days have passed since the start of the Parcelforce and Post Office reviews; what the total expenditure up to the present date has been; and what the average expenditure on consultancy for each day of the review process has been.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government announced their intention to privatise Parcelforce on 15 July 1992, Official Report, column 1137 and announced the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office on 29 July 1992. From these dates to 31 March 1994 there were 435 and 425 working days respectively. Expenditure on consultancy advice stands at £1,366,204·97 to date, representing an average of approximately £3,150 per working day.

Trans-European Energy Networks

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy in respect of projects a1, a2, c1, d10, e1, f1 and f2, listed in the annex containing projects of common interest, to the European Commission paper on guidelines for trans-European energy networks.

Mr. Eggar: The proposals are one aspect of continuing discussions between member states on trans-European networks. We consider that the criteria for identifying potential projects should be established before considering any list of specific projects. In our view, the criteria should recognise the principle of not supporting projects which are economically unviable, or which are capable of being financed by the private sector.

Research Establishments

Mr. Jessel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of the DTI research establishments.

Mr. Heseltine: I announced on 4 May last year that I had commenced a review of the options for the future of my Department's laboratories. This review, carried out with the aid of KPMG Peat Marwick management consultants, is now complete, and I am announcing my intentions for the future of the three major establishments: the National Engineering Laboratory—NEL—the Laboratory of the Government Chemist—LGC—and the National Physical Laboratory—NPL. During the process of finalising these proposals, my Department has kept in close touch with the team undertaking the current multi-departmental efficiency scrutiny of public sector research establishments.

I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses the summary report I have received from the consultants KPMG Peat Marwick. This summary necessarily excludes information the publication of which might be prejudicial to the taxpayer's interest in the negotiations surrounding these privatisations.

The DTI's laboratories are an important national resource and each of them plays a significant role in ensuring the competitiveness of British industry, and in meeting the needs of Government Departments. In the past few years they have been established as executive agencies within my Department under the "next steps" initiative. This has involved financing themselves principally from fee income, earned on contracts placed by arm's length customers. Their customers are in the private sector, in other Government Departments and in my own Department. Under this management regime the laboratories have become more focused in their work, more sensitive to their customers' requirements, and more cost-efficient. They have a good record of meeting the targets Ministers have set them, and of improving their performance from year to year.

In the light of reductions in their prospective work load, these laboratories face the need to reduce and restructure their operations and to seek new business and new customers. At the same time, the progress they have made as executive agencies, although it has been impressive, has also revealed more sharply the limitations inherent in operating on a commercial basis within a Government Department. In their ability both to raise and use capital and to develop and exploit the widest possible markets for their services they do not have the flexibilities they would possess in the private sector. All of the laboratories are now facing competition, and are experiencing declining work loads reflecting both that competition and the Government's changing research priorities. In response, the laboratories have improved their efficiency, but now need more flexibility to continue doing so.

My review has convinced me that each of these laboratories will respond best to these challenges within the private sector, and that once they are set free from the constraints of operating within Government, they will be better able both to serve their existing customers and to market their services to new customers, above all in industry. These laboratories all have a unique asset in the expertise of their staff, which is respected internationally. In the private sector there will be more scope for that expertise to be applied to the advantage of British industry. The laboratories will remain first class institutions.

The NEL's role is that of a technology services enterprise serving customers in the private and public sectors. A decision has already been announced that it will be prepared for privatisation once it has established its commercial viability. For some years now the NEL's aim has been to reach this point in 1994-95, so that the process of privatisation can be set in hand during 1995. It has made major progress towards these targets, and my review has now confirmed them in spite of major changes in its programme of activities, reflecting changing priorities within my Department's research and technology spending. These changes will make substantial restructuring necessary, following which I intend to seek a trade purchaser of the NEL during the summer of 1995.

The LGC's role is to provide chemical analysis and measurement services to several Government Departments and other bodies. A key asset is its independence and its reputation for impartiality. I have decided to pursue the recommendation of my consultants that it should be established as an independent non-profit-distributing company in the private sector. Preparations for this will be put in hand immediately, including a major restructuring programme, and I hope to complete the process by the end of 1995-96. However my mind is not closed to the possibility of a trade sale of the LGC, if a suitable buyer comes forward who can demonstrate the requisite independence.

The NPL's main task is to develop and disseminate national measurement standards. Its dominant customer is my Department's national measurement system policy unit. Although this position will remain, the laboratory needs to continue restructuring to adapt itself to a reduced budget for work of this kind. Although the efficiency of the NPL has continued to increase steadily as an executive agency, it now needs to achieve further significant restructuring. I have come to the conclusion that this will be more effectively achieved if its management is contracted to the private sector. I thus intend to invite proposals for a management contractor during 1995. Commercial progress under the management contractors will be carefully reviewed, and might in due course result in the NPL becoming ready to move into private sector ownership.

I shall separately be considering the future of the National Measurement Accreditation Service, part of the NPL, which the consultants felt should be viable on its own and could more appropriately operate independently of the NPL.

Although all these laboratories are finding an increasing proportion of their business from the private sector, my review has made it clear that their success under private sector ownership or management will depend on their ability to bid on fair and equal terms for business from customers in my own and other Government Departments. Those taking on the responsibility of their ownership and management will naturally need to be assured that these opportunities will be available. It is the clear intention of the Government that they will be. The White Paper "Realising our Potential" (CM2250) sets out our commitment that competitive tendering procedures must become the normal method of placing work.

These decisions represent major changes for all three establishments and their staff. The changes will enable the NEL, the NPL and the LGC to take better advantage of new opportunities and to forge new and successful futures for themselves. The planning of this process is a complex task requiring thorough co-ordination. To assist in pushing it through with all vigour I have appointed the PA Consulting Group to act as project managers.

The consultants also considered future options for the National Weights and Measures Laboratory—NWML. They recommended no major change but I am looking at possibilities which the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill will offer for contracting out some of the NWML's services. I will be making a further announcement in due course.

Electricity

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990 to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In December of last year, I announced a number of forthcoming amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990.

I have today laid before Parliament an order which will bring four of the five amendments that I announced into effect. These are:

raising the amount of power that may be provided by small generators in certain circumstances without requiring a generation licence; removing the condition that an own-generator requires a supply licence unless at least 51 per cent. of the electricity from his generating station goes to qualifying customers on the own-generators' site; allowing companies to resell limited amounts of electricity purchased from a second tier supplier or own generator to franchise consumers located on their site; and removal of the requirement that most exempt generators who have stations over 200 kW capacity must notify the Secretary of State of their name and address.

My officials have also considered further the fifth of these amendments, to allow more companies to be included in a "qualifying group" of consumers that may be supplied by an own-generator without requiring a licence. I expect to lay a separate order covering this amendment shortly.

These changes will reduce the regulatory burden on small generators, own generators and consumers who sell on a small proportion of the electricity they purchase. Consumers should also be helped by the undertaking on pool prices and the sale of generating plant that the Director General of Electricity Supply received from the main generators in February. I also note that DTI figures now show that the average electricity price paid by manufacturing industry in Great Britain fell by nearly 7 per cent. between 1989—before the electricity industry was vested—and 1993. This is further evidence of the success of electricity privatisation.

Small Firms

Mr. Garnier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what developments have been made, since his announcement on 14 December 1992, in exploring how the small firms loan guarantee scheme can be improved through linking loans with appropriate help, advice and training in business skills.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am pleased to announce, subject to contract negotiations, the funding of 10 pilot projects which will offer advice and counselling to borrowers under the loan guarantee scheme. The pilot projects will start as soon as possible and will run for three years. The pilots will operate in the areas covered by the following:

Avon TEC
Birmingham Business Link
Doncaster Business Link
Hertfordshire TEC
Tyneside TEC
Metro TEC (Wigan)
Kent TEC
South Thames TEC
Fife Enterprise
Tayside Enterprise

European Union Fifth Directive

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which aspects of the European Union's fifth directive he has opposed.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am opposed to a number of provisions in the fifth company law directive including the requirements for employee participation in public companies with 1,000 or more employees and for executive directors to be in a minority on company boards. I am also opposed to the inclusion in the directive of articles on the adoption and auditing of accounts.

Israel

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the trade figures between the United Kingdom and Israel over the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Heseltine: The trade figures between the United Kingdom and Israel for the past five years are shown in the table:

United Kingdom trade with Israel—1989 to 1993

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Imports	480	506	456	485	550
Exports	502	568	531	586	876

Source: United Kingdom Overseas Trade (Business Monitor MA20).

Novelty Fund

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy with regard to the novelty fund; if he will make a statement as to how much is in it; and what it does.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 12 April 1994]: I am unaware of this fund.

Enterprise Budget

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the total enterprise budget for small firms for training and enterprise councils, for the last three financial years.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 April 1994]: The total enterprise budget for small firms for training and enterprise councils for the last three financial years is:

	£ million
1991-92	156·98
1992-93	153·90
1993-94	162·19

WALES

Consultation Documents

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 634, if he will list the consultation documents and indicate where the information about them is held.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House and will be updated regularly. Copies of the consultative documents are available from my Department.

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the contracts currently being worked on for his Department by Coopers and Lybrand, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse, BDO Binder Hamlyn, KPMG Peat Marwick, Grant Thornton, Robson Rhodes, Levy Gee, Hacker Young, Pannell Kerr Forster and Stoy Hayward.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office currently has contracts with four of the firms mentioned. These are as follows:

Coopers and Lybrand
Evaluation of the advice and guidance credits initiative, commissioned jointly by the Welsh Office and the Department of Employment.
Financial accountancy support on the monitoring of NHS trusts in Wales.

KPMG Peat Marwick
Financial appraisal of local authority waste disposal transfer scheme. Advice on the Milk Marketing Board's scheme of reorganisation.

Pannell Kerr Forster
GP fundholding—manual of accounts helpline.

Price Waterhouse
Financial accountancy support on the monitoring of NHS trusts in Wales.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the position of the ambulance service in Wales in relation to the citizens charter; what is the response time expected for an emergency call; what arrangements have been made for monitoring the speed of response to emergency calls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The patients charter requires that an emergency ambulance should arrive within 14 minutes in an urban area, 18 minutes within a rural area or 21 minutes within a sparsely populated area. In Wales these response times are expected to be met in 95 per cent. of calls. Performance is monitored quarterly and the target is being met for Wales.

School Buildings (Repair and Maintenance)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the amount spent on repair and maintenance of school buildings by local education authorities in Wales for each financial year since 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is given in the following table. Figures for 1992-93 onwards are not yet available.

Gross current expenditure on repair and maintenance of school buildings, fixed plant and grounds[1]

1989-90	33,807
1990-91	36,984
1991-92	40,867

Source: Local authority returns.
[1] Excludes capital expenditure on new buildings, land or plant. Includes salaries of building maintenance workers and groundsmen, cost of materials, recharges by external agencies, charges from direct service organisations, architects, engineers and surveyors and expenditure on energy conservation and on health and safety. Excludes salaries of caretakers, cleaners etc.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidance to both directly managed units and hospital trusts regarding the segregation of clinical waste.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance to both directly managed units and NHS trusts on the management of clinical waste, including segregation, was issued on 30 November 1993 and 21 February 1994.

CTF Training Courses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to continue the training courses of members of CTF consequent upon the closure on 31 March.

Sir Wyn Roberts: North East Wales TEC is working with CTF and the Employment Service to arrange counselling and assessment interviews and to identify suitable alternative opportunities. All participants affected will be given the opportunity to continue their programmes.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the closure of the CTF training centre, Shotton, Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The North East Wales training and enterprise council and CTF did not reach agreement on renewal of a contract for 1994-95. The TEC is working with CTF and the local employment service to ensure suitable alternative training provision for the participants on Government training programmes who are affected.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been trained at the CTF training centre; and how many were undergoing training up to 31 March.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the year up to 31 March 1994, 80 people were trained at the centre with 51 still in training at 31 March.

Welsh Pre-School Playgroups Association

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make grant funding available to the Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association has been awarded a grant of £164,400 to help meet its central administrative and service delivery targets in 1994-95.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Desertification

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes in the United Kingdom overseas aid programme he expects will result from the negotiation of a global convention to combat desertification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This will depend on the provisions of the final text although we do not expect the United Kingdom aid programme, which already gives attention to the issues involved, to require major changes. The negotiations are giving high priority to the problems facing many African countries; this region already benefits from a substantial share of our aid.

Palestinians

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to provide (a) emergency aid and (b) development finance during 1994 for the Palestinians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are ready to respond to emergencies as they occur. For example, following the Hebron mosque massacre on Friday 25 February, we made an immediate contribution of £34,000 towards the expenses of a surgical team of 10 Jordanian specialists, specialist supplies in support of the team and subsequent nursing, followed by a further £51,000 for hospital equipment. We have also given £500,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross, in response to an appeal for its work in Israel and the occupied territories.

Development finance in support of the peace process will continue to be provided during 1994 through multilateral programmes, including those of the EC and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, and our bilateral technical assistance programme.

Iraqi Exiles

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom has given to Turkey and Iran in respect of the exodus of 2 million Iraqi Kurds, Assyrians, Chaldaeans, Yezidis and Turcomans after the uprising in March 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Neither the Turkish nor the Iranian Governments sought assistance from the United Kingdom Government. However, since the 1991 crisis we have contributed over £2 million to helping Iraqi refugees in Iran. Details were given to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 25 January at columns 133-34. We have given substantial assistance to all the groups mentioned through the UN agencies and non-governmental organisations.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all payments made by the Overseas Development Administration in relation to the Pergau dam project, with the dates they were made and the amount of the payment made in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration has made over 200 payments in respect of this project since signature of the financial intergovernmental arrangement in July 1991. These fall into two categories: (a) interest rate support payments made to the Export Credits Guarantee Department to reduce the interest rate charged by the lending banks and (b) payments to consultants for technical, financial and environmental monitoring of the project. The cost of (a) has been: 1991-92, £1·882 million; 1992-93, £7·835 million; 1993-94, £14·650 million. The cost of (b) has been 1991-92, £0·039 million; 1992-93, £0·210 million; 1993-94, £0·170 million.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on what date the contract was signed between Her Majesty's Government and the Malaysian Electricity Company for funding of the Pergau project;

(2) on what date the formal agreement to finance the Pergau project was signed by Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Malaysia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government are not party to the contract between the contractor and Tenaga Nasional Berhad for this project. Her Majesty's Government signed a financial arrangement with the Malaysian Government in respect of the project on 8 July 1991.

Aid Programme

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all British institutions and companies receiving funds from the British aid programme in each of the last five years, listing the amount of funds received by each of the institutions and companies for each of those years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the ATP projects of over £5,000,000 in value in the past 10 years where the escalation factor has been over 10 per cent. after the firm contract proposal has been made by the Government; and if he will name the contractors involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the extent to which British and other non-governmental organisations are seeking to work in Burma and on what projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration does not hold detailed information on the plans of individual non-governmental organisations seeking to work in Burma. However, our contacts with the NGO umbrella group, BOND—British Overseas NGOs for Development—indicate that there are around 13 British NGOs with differing degrees of interest in working in Burma across a variety of sectors. We are currently supporting one British NGO which is involved in English language teaching and teacher training activities.

We have no information on NGOs from other countries seeking to work in Burma.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the expenditure of his contribution to the Liberian trust fund.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The details of expenditure are for the UN to decide, on the understanding that our contribution of $1 million is restricted to the fund's humanitarian purposes. We understand that $251,000 is committed to a public information campaign to encourage national reconciliation and to facilitate disarmament, and a further $16,000 will help ex-combatants to resume their studies at the university of Liberia. The balance will be used for humanitarian needs connected to the demobilisation programme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Department

Mr. McMaster: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission how many cases of dismissal of Refreshment Department staff have resulted in industrial tribunals in each of the past five years; how many have resulted in decisions against management; what was the total cost to Parliament of (a) being represented at tribunals and (b) awards against the Department over the same period; and what was the total cost of out-of-court settlements, pre-tribunal agreements and compensation awards over the same period.

Mr. Beith: In the past five years there has been one case of dismissal from the Refreshment Department which resulted in the member of staff concerned appealing to an industrial tribunal claiming unfair dismissal. The member of staff was dismissed on disciplinary grounds on 22 June 1989. The case was heard on 4 December 1989. The industrial tribunal found in favour of the complainant but in doing so acknowledged his contribution to the dismissal, which was placed at 60 per cent.

The complainant sought reinstatement but the tribunal found neither reinstatement nor re-engagement appropriate. An award of £1,500 was made, paid from House funds. The House of Commons Commission was represented by the Treasury Solicitor who, at that time, did not charge for its services. No costs were therefore incurred by the House for legal representation.

Other than the above there have been no out-of-court settlements, pre-tribunal agreements or compensation awards in the past five years.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission, if he will list (a) the location, damage category, extent and scale of damage, and whether such damage is new or recurrent, for each site of special scientific interest contained in reports to the National Audit Office since 1982 and (b) the cases and locations where such damage has been caused by new road schemes or road repairs or reinstatement works.

Sir Peter Hordern: I understand that the National Audit Office does not receive routine reports on sites of special scientific interest and does not maintain lists of damage or encroachment to such sites. This is a matter for English Nature.

The Comptroller and Auditor General is, however, undertaking an examination into "English Nature: Protecting and Managing Sites Of Special Scientific Interest" and expects to report his findings to Parliament later this month. This report will be available to hon. Members in the usual way.

European Community Institutions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members have taken advantage of the visit to a European Community institution that they are entitled to under the resolution of 6 December 1991, for the financial year 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Tony Newton: May I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 4 November 1993 (Official Report, Vol. 231, col. 362) concerning visits undertaken in 1992-93.

I will write to the hon. Member when final details for 1993-94 become available. So far 69 Members have submitted claims for journeys undertaken during the year.

Written Answers

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) how many parliamentary questions were answered in the year to 28 February 1994, by Government Department;

(2) who were the 10 members who asked the most parliamentary questions in the year to 28 February 1994; how many questions were asked by each; and at what estimated cost to the departments concerned.

Mr. Tony Newton: The POLIS database holds records for the following 41,126 written answers given in the year to 28 February 1994:

Department	Number of answers
Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	1,643
Attorney General	261
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	457
Defence	3,003
Education	1,595
Employment	1,686

Department	Number of answers
Environment	3,427
Foreign and Commonwealth Office	2,749
Health	4,405
Home Office	3,233
Lord Chancellor	552
Lord President of the Council	128
National Heritage	751
Northern Ireland Office	1,397
Prime Minister	844
Scottish Office	2,746
Social Security	2,138
Trade and Industry	2,995
Transport	2,589
Treasury	1,937
Welsh Office	2,343
Accommodation and Works Committee	51
Administration Committee	66
Catering Committee	22
Church Commissioners	42
Committee of Selection	1
Finance and Services Committee	10
House of Commons Commission	37
Information Committee	11
Public Accounts Commission	7

The 10 Members who received the highest number of these answers, together with the number of answers and the estimated cost, were as follows:

The hon. Member for:	Answer	Cost £
Blaenau Gwent (Mr. L. Smith)	1,323	128,000
Don Valley (Mr. Redmond)	983	95,000
Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo)	736	71,000
Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd)	517	50,000
Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle)	488	47,000
Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett)	474	46,000
Newcastle Upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins)	419	41,000
Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley)	414	40,000
Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan)	411	40,000
Leyton (Mr. Cohen)	403	39,000

The cost is calculated from the most recent estimate of the average cost of giving a written answer to a parliamentary question, namely £97, rounded to the nearest £1,000.

EDUCATION

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what checks are made between his Department and the Department of the Environment to establish how much a local education authority's gross expenditure is validly recorded as spent on its schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is the responsibility of the district auditor, appointed by the local education authority, to check that the authority validly records its expenditure on schools and on other areas.

The Department for Education and, I understand, the Department of the Environment, carry out validity checks on authorities' revenue outturn returns. Any figure on the return which varies significantly from the previous year's return is queried with the authority concerned.

Students

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what were the factors and figures taken into account in the student income and expenditure survey for 1992-93;

(2) how the figures for commercial borrowing for student loans in the year 1992-93 were calculated for students under the age of 26 years;

(3) what information he has on whether borrowing by mature students is higher than by younger students; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for the difference in levels of borrowing between those groups.

Mr. Boswell: Copies of the "Student Income and Expenditure Survey" for the 1992-93 academic year were placed in the Library when it was published on 16 December 1993. The survey took account of income from grants, student loans, money and gifts from parents, earnings, social security benefits, commercial loans, withdrawals from savings, and of income from other sources such as investments. Account was taken of expenditure on housing costs, food, travel and other course-related expenses, leisure and entertainment, clothes and goods and services.

Sampled students were asked what interest-bearing loans they had taken out during the 1992-93 academic year, either from a bank or other financial institution or privately, and how much had been repaid. They were also asked about any overdraft held at the start of the year or expected to be taken out during the year, and how much they expected to be overdrawn at the end of the year.

The figures published in the survey for overdrafts for younger students show the amounts at the start and at the end of the year, but it is the change in the overdraft balance which is used as a component of student income. The survey showed significant differences in the patterns and levels of borrowing between different groups of mature students as well as between these groups and younger students. Students were not asked their reasons for borrowing money.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to what extent he has taken into account the net change in the overdraft balance bill when he assesses student debts, particularly in the final year; and what assessment he has made of what the final figure would be if the net change in the overdraft balance figures were taken into account.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend collects no information about individual students' debts or overdrafts. The "Student Income and Expenditure Survey" included questions to students in the sample about overdrafts. A copy of the report of the survey, commissioned by the Department, was placed in the Library on 16 December.

My right hon. Friend keeps the repayment arrangements for student loans under review. He believes it right that students should contribute towards their own maintenance costs. The repayment terms of the student loan facility are generous. Graduates can defer repayments for a year at a time if their income is below 85 per cent. of average earnings. For those with incomes above that level—currently about £14,000 a year—the level of repayments should be manageable.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will conduct an analysis of mature student borrowing by year of course undertaken.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend does not propose to undertake such an analysis.

Education Institutions

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many education institutions he and other Ministers in his Department have visited since the 1992 general election.

Mr. Patten: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Schools	237
Further education institutions	44
Higher education institutions	53
Total	334

Drug Abuse (Pupil Exclusions)

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils have been permanently excluded from schools in the north Warwickshire area for drug abuse in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Forth: Figures for each of the last 10 years are not available. Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with the summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system—NERS. In England, 81 pupils were excluded for drug-related offences and solvent abuse in year one and 179 in year two. It is not possible to provide an area breakdown of the figures because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughter Licences

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to introduce legislation which would require the purchaser of animals for slaughter to be licensed.

Mr. Soames: I have no such plans.

Pesticides Safety Directorate

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the pesticides safety directorate in 1994-95.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have set the pesticides safety directorate the following targets relating to relocation, financial performance, efficiency, the delivery of pesticides approval services and policy advice in 1994-95:

To relocate the agency from its present three sites to a single site in York in the Autumn of 1994.

To achieve 100 per cent. recovery of full costs and an overall efficiency gain of 2 per cent.

To meet the targets for delivery of services as specified:

Pesticides approval	Applications completed	Maximum processing time (working days)
Technical Stream
Normal	280	335
Administrative Fast	500	20
Fast	265	115
Experimental Permit	40	190
Off label	100	60
Upgrade	160	—
Departmental Exp. Permit	12	255
Departmental Normal	4	335
Committee Stream
Sift	8	120
Active Ingredient	12	235-275

The processing time targets apply to 80 per cent. of new applications.

The scientific quality of the directorate's work on the evaluation of pesticides will be monitored by the chairman of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Details of performance in 1993-94 will be set out in the agency's annual report and accounts to be published during July 1994.

PRIME MINISTER

Meigle

Q7. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit Meigle.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Aberdeen

Q9. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to visit Aberdeen in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 April.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he was able to clarify, in his recent discussions with the Indian Prime Minister, whether the Indian National Commission on Human Rights will be able to look at the situation in Indian-administered Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I discussed the Indian Human Rights Commission in general terms with the Indian Prime Minister during our meeting on 14 March. We have welcomed the Commission's decision to conduct its first investigation into the incident at Bijbehara in Kashmir in October. Its report is due to be published on 17 April.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

England v Germany Football Match

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice he gave to the Football Association in relation to the proposed England v Germany match in Berlin; and when he first became aware of the date of the match.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave no advice to the Football Association about staging the England v Germany football match in Berlin. We first became aware of the fixture in January of this year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 307, what action has been taken by the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations agencies to ensure that there is funding to ensure the security of the heavy weapons being handed over by militias in Somaliland and to provide for the civilian rehabilitation of the disarmed militias.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The proposal prepared by the National Demobilization Committee—NDC—in north-west Somalia, with assistance from the UNDP/OPS contracted team of Zimbabweans—ZIMDAT—has now been refined and will be presented to donors at a briefing and discussion session in Nairobi on 22 April 1994. An appeal for funds will follow the briefing.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress in Burma on human rights; and what representations he is currently making to the Burmese Government for human rights improvements.

Mr. Goodlad: There has been no significant improvement in Burma's human rights record.

We and our European partners continue to press the ruling military regime—the State Law and Order Restoration Council—to respect the human rights of all Burmese people, including ethnic minorities, and to release Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders. A resolution on these lines was adopted by consensus at the recent session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what stance was taken on Burma at the recent meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Goodlad: A consensus resolution was adopted at the recent session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, calling on Burma to release unconditionally Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, and criticising the human rights violations reported by the special rapporteur, Professor Yokota.

Hebron Massacre

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Israeli Government about Israeli terrorists and the Hebron massacre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 30 March, Official Report, column 806.

Syria

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current relations with Syria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since diplomatic relations were restored in 1990 relations have steadily improved. They are now good.

Occupied Territories

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current situation in the Gaza strip and Jericho regarding the withdrawal of Israeli military forces, in line with the timetable scheduled for the implementation of the declaration of principles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the Israeli army has begun preparation for withdrawal from the Gaza strip and Jericho. The details of that withdrawal are still the subject of negotiations between the parties.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Palestine Liberation Organisation for Her Majesty's Government to join an international observer force to oversee withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Gaza strip and Jericho; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no request for participation in an observer force on withdrawal from Gaza and Jericho. We remain ready, together with our European Union partners, to contribute to a temporary international presence in the occupied territories as called for in United Nations Security Council resolution 904, if requested by the parties.

Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current year's Team Spirit exercise in the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on 16 March, Official Report, column 702.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the US decision to deploy Patriot missiles in South Korea for the United Kingdom's policy on Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The deployment of Patriot missiles in South Korea is not a matter for us. But we have much sympathy for the considerations which have led the US Government and the Government of the Republic of Korea to agree that this defensive system should be deployed.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information he has received from the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna and the Centre for Disarmament Affairs at the UN in New York regarding the inspection of nuclear sites in North Korea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 13 April, at column 206.

Ukraine

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in the Ukraine and its commitment to accede to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcomed the decision adopted by the Ukrainian Parliament on 3 February to ratify the strategic arms reduction talks treaty. We also welcomed the Parliament's decision to withdraw its reservation to article V of the Lisbon protocol of the START treaty, under which Ukraine undertakes to accede to the non-proliferation treaty in the shortest possible time. We have noted the affirmations by the Ukrainian President of Ukraine's intention to accede to the treaty, and we shall continue to urge her to do so at the earliest possible date.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries that have not acceded to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A list of the 27 countries which have yet to accede to the non-proliferation treaty has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries that have recently announced their intention to accede to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Argentina and Algeria have recently announced their intention to accede to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. We have also welcomed the affirmations by the Ukrainian President of Ukraine's intention to accede to the treaty, and we shall continue to urge her to do so at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest situation in respect of accession to the non-proliferation treaty by the states of the former Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Those republics of the former Soviet Union which have yet to accede to the non-proliferation treaty are Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Ukraine.

Iraq

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the International Atomic Energy Agency has made to Iraq regarding its obligations under the non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In Iraq's case, the terms of the fullscope safeguards agreement, concluded pursuant to its membership of the NPT, have been subsumed into United Nations Security Council resolutions requiring Iraq to surrender to the IAEA all its nuclear weapons-usable material for destruction or removal. Moreover Iraq may not in the future acquire, research or develop any materials relating to nuclear weapons. The IAEA is at present setting in place a monitoring regime to ensure that weapons programmes of this type cannot be regenerated in Iraq.

Israel

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the International Atomic Energy Agency made to Israel regarding inspection of nuclear bases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Israel has concluded a safeguards agreement with the IAEA to cover its research reactor at Soreq. We continue to urge Israel to allay suspicions about its nuclear programme by acceding to the non-proliferation treaty as a non-nuclear weapon state, and concluding a fullscope safeguards agreement with the IAEA.

Yemen

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Yemen.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support all the people of Yemen in their efforts to overcome the political crisis currently facing the country. We urge all parties to engage in dialogue and to work together for a peaceful and stable future for the people of Yemen.

Diplomats

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish figures recording the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by diplomatic missions in London during 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payments.

The total of 1,941 represents a 53·4 per cent. reduction from the 1992 published figure of 4,166 which has now been further reduced to 2,328 by late payments. This compares favourably with the same period in 1985 when almost 60,000 fines were recorded, and continues the downward trend in parking offences. We welcome this further reduction in unpaid parking fines and appreciate the co-operation of diplomatic missions and international organisations since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall continue carefully to monitor the level of unpaid fines, and take appropriate measures to ensure that fines are paid.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were allegedly committed in 1993 by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity; and how many foreign diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in the past year as a result of alleged offences.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Twenty-nine alleged serious offences by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1993. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the report to the Foreign Affairs Committee "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges (1985)" as offences falling into the category which would in certain circumstances attract a maximum penalty of six months imprisonment or more. The majority involved drinking and driving, and shoplifting.

One diplomat was withdrawn from post in Britain as a result of alleged offences compared with eight the previous year.

South Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what remaining sanctions are being applied by Britain and other countries on South Africa; and when it is intended that they should be lifted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following international sanctions against South Africa are being applied by Britain —with exceptions as indicated:

United Nations

A mandatory embargo under SCR 418 of 4 November 1977 on the export of arms and para-military equipment to South Africa.

European Union

(i) An embargo on exports of arms and para-military equipment to South Africa;
(ii) An embargo on imports of arms and para-military equipment from South Africa;
(iii) A refusal to cooperate in the military sphere (ie a continuing ban on eg joint military exercises).

Commonwealth

(i) The strict enforcement of the mandatory Arms Embargo against South Africa;
(ii) Economic measures against South Africa as follows:
  (a) A ban on the sale and export of computer equipment capable of use by South African military forces, police or security forces[1];
  (b) A ban on new contracts for the sale and export of nuclear goods, materials and technology to South Africa[1];
  (c) A ban on the sale and export of oil to South Africa[2];
  (d) A strict and rigorously controlled embargo on imports of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and para-military equipment from South Africa;
  (e) An embargo on all military cooperation with South Africa.

[1] United Kingdom adherence ended following lifting of comparable European Union restrictions following the first meeting of the Transitional Executive Council on 7 December 1993.
[2] United Kingdom adherence ended following lifting of EC Oil Embargo in April 1992.

The lifting of United Nations embargoes is a matter for the Security Council. The European Union and Commonwealth have not yet agreed when their remaining restrictions will be lifted.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the United Nations regarding the recent meeting of faction leaders in Nairobi to bring an end to the war in Somalia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Representatives of the 15 Somali factions agreed a declaration calling for a ceasefire and voluntary disarmament. They will meet on 15 April to discuss a national reconciliation conference on 15 May to elect a president, vice-presidents and prime minister as well as the modalities to establish a national legislative assembly. We welcome this and hope it will contribute to the resolution of this tragic conflict.

TREASURY

Taxation

12. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the effect recent tax increases will have on the average level of tax in the country.

Mr. Dorrell: The average impact across all households will be increases of £5·75 in 1994-95 and £8·75 in the two years to 1995-96.

14. Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how much poor families on 75 per cent. or less of average earnings are now paying in income tax and national insurance following the changes introduced at the beginning of this month; and what the figure was for 1978-79.

Mr. Dorrell: The amount paid in tax and NICs will vary at different levels of income. The real take-home pay of a married man on three-quarters average earnings has increased by £61 per week since 1978-79.

18. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the increase in the tax burden for a married couple on typical earnings, and with two children, since 1978-79 is accounted for by increases and extensions in VAT.

Sir John Cope: The amount of VAT paid by particular types of families depends partly on the rate and coverage of VAT and partly on levels and patterns of spending. Reliable estimates of the contribution made by each of these factors are not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate how much single persons on average male earnings are now paying in income tax and national insurance following the changes introduced at the beginning of this month; and what the figure was for 1978-79;

(2) if he will estimate the amount a typical couple with two children and one spouse working on average male earnings are now paying in income tax and national insurance following the changes introduced at the beginning of April; what he estimates this figure will be from April 1995; and what the figure was for 1978-79;

(3) if he will estimate the change in the direct tax burden a typical family will face in (a) 1994-95 and (b) 1995-96 on current policies;

(4) if he will estimate how much poor families on 75 per cent. or less of average earnings are now paying in income tax and national insurance following the changes introduced at the beginning of April; and what the figure was for 1978-79.

Mr. Dorrell: Information for 1994-95 was given in the reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 19 January 1994, and for 1978-79 in the tables placed in the House of Commons Library as noted in the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 13 April 1989, Official Report, column 624. The effect of the Budget changes in 1995-96 will depend on changes in earnings and prices.

Research and Development

13. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about tax incentives for industrial research and development.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations for enhanced relief.

Inward Investment

15. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has that the business taxation regime has encouraged inward investment into Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The United Kingdom has the lowest rate of corporation tax in the EC and G7. This has undoubtedly contributed to the United Kingdom's success in attracting inward investment.

Longer-term Investment

16. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new initiatives he plans to encourage longer-term investment.

Mr. Portillo: The Government believe that the best way to promote investment in British business is by creating the right macro-economic environment, with low inflation and sound public finances.

Income Tax

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people earning less than £64,000 a year who are now paying more tax than they did in 1979.

17. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people earning less than £64,000 a year who are now paying more tax than they did in 1979.

19. Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people earning less than £64,000 a year who are now paying more tax than they did in 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1994-95 no-one will pay more income tax than they would under a 1978-79 indexed regime.

Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the thresholds for higher-rate income tax, at current prices, at constant prices and as percentages of average male earnings in each year from 1979-80 to 1993-94 together with estimates of 1994-95, for single people, single-wage married couples and two-wage married couples.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is in the table.

[1] Provisional. At 1994-95 prices based on Budget assumptions of a 2 per cent. growth in the RPI in 1993-94 and 3·25 per cent. growth in 1994-95.
[2] Full-time males paid at adult rates working a full week (all occupations). Provisional for 1993-94 and 1994-95.
[3] Assumes wife's earnings election not made.
[4] Independent taxation for 1990-91 onwards.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has now received concerning the increase in the number of people who will have to pay income tax as a result of his decision to freeze income tax allowances.

Mr. Dorrell: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations about the freezing of allowances.

Trade Balance

20. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of trade.

Mr. Portillo: The visible trade deficit in 1993 was the same as in 1992, despite strengthening activity in the United Kingdom and weakness in key European markets. With continuing good unit labour cost performance and improved competitiveness, the prospects are encouraging.

Debts (Late Payment)

21. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further consideration he has given to the introduction of a statutory right to interest on late payment of debt.

Mr. Nelson: As my right hon. and learned Friend announced in his Budget speech, a consultation paper on late payment of commercial debt was issued on 30 November. The consultation period closed on 31 March. We are currently considering the responses to this document.

Government Borrowing

22. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government are taking to bring Government borrowing under control.

Mr. Portillo: The tight control of public spending and the tax measures announced in both Budgets last year will reinforce the fall in the public sector borrowing requirement as the economy recovers, returning it towards balance in the medium term.

Higher-rate Tax

23. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has of the effect on incentives of cutting higher rates of direct taxation; and by how much higher rates of income tax have been changed since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1979, the top rate of tax on earned income was 83 per cent. It is now 40 per cent. Cutting tax rates has improved incentives at all levels, and has encouraged entrepreneurial initiative upon which the nation depends. Higher-rate taxpayers now contribute 40 per cent. of total income tax compared with 20 per cent. in 1979.

Economy

24. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest state of the economy and the effect on the peripheral regions of fiscal policies.

Mr. Portillo: The Government's sound fiscal policies will ensure that the economic recovery is sustainable; all regions will enjoy the benefits of that recovery.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

25. Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to publish his latest forecasts for the public sector borrowing requirement for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Portillo: The first estimate of the 1993-94 outturn of the public sector borrowing requirement will be published on 20 April. A new forecast for the 1994-95 PSBR will be published this summer.

Value Added Tax

26. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his Finance Minister counterparts in Europe to discuss developments in the VAT regime.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer expects to meet EC Finance Ministers at the forthcoming meetings of the ECOFIN Council which are scheduled for 16 May and 6 June. The agenda will not be finalised until close to the meetings, but the Greek presidency's provisional agenda for 6 June provides for discussion on the draft EC directive on the VAT treatment of passenger transport and the draft EC VAT simplification directive.

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the fuel and power companies about VAT; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: None. However Customs officials have had a number of meetings with representatives of the gas and electricity supply industries and with other fuel suppliers. A wide range of issues about the implementation of VAT on fuel and power have been discussed.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much he estimates the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel will cost the average family from (a) the beginning of April 1994 and (b) April 1995;

(2) what estimate he has made of the increase to the average family's weekly fuel bill of an 8 per cent. tax imposition on domestic fuel;

(3) if he will estimate the cost in a full year to an average household's energy bills of the introduciton of VAT at (a) 8 per cent. and (b) 17½ per cent.

Sir John Cope: The cost of VAT on domestic fuel bills will depend on the future level of fuel prices and on what happens to spending patterns. But VAT at 8 per cent. applied to an estimate of fuel bills in 1993-94, would cost households on average around £1.05 per week, and VAT at 17½ per cent. around £2·30 a week.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has now received concerning the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel and power.

Sir John Cope: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the number of people who took advantage of avoiding paying VAT on fuel after 1 April by paying their bills in advance;

(2) if he will estimate the number of pensioners and people on low incomes who took advantage of avoiding paying VAT on fuel after 1 April by paying their bills in advance.

Sir John Cope: It is estimated that about 5 per cent. of domestic electricity consumers and about 4 per cent. of domestic gas consumers paid fuel bills in advance of the imposition of VAT on 1 April. It is not possible to make separate estimates for different types of household.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of an average household's income he forecasts will be spent on VAT in (a) 1994-95 and (b) 1995-96.

Sir John Cope: The latest published information shows that VAT paid by households averaged around 6-8 per cent. of household gross income in 1992.

Public Borrowing

28. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the economy of allowing the current level of public borrowing to continue unchecked.

Mr. Portillo: Failure to put the public finances on a sound basis would have severely damaged confidence and thereby weakened the recovery.

Tax Distribution

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest information he has about the income distribution of the direct and indirect tax burden.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest information is given in the article "The Effects of Taxes and Benefits on Household Income, 1992" published in the January 1994 edition of Economic Trends.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the transitional costs of local government reform in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: The transitional costs of local government reform in England will depend on the final structures that are adopted. The latest estimate of transitional costs in Wales is between £65 million and £150 million and in Scotland between £120 million and £194 million.

Mr. Michael Allcock

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Mr. Michael Allcock was first suspended from his duties; when he is expected to return to work; if he will receive full pay during the period of his suspension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on these matters to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, (Mr. Cousins) on 30 June 1993 at column 505. Mr. Allcock was suspended from duty pending inquiries being carried out by the Metropolitan police. He was first suspended on 11 September 1992 on full pay. On 20 January 1994 he was charged with criminal offences and since that date his suspension has been without pay. I am not able to make any further statement pending the outcome of the criminal proceedings.

Tax Relief

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of tax relief on investment income for (a) occupational pensions, (b) personal pensions and (c) other exempt institutions, differentiating between that part of the relief due to relief from tax on dividends and that part of the relief due to relief from tax on capital gains.

Mr. Dorrell: The available estimates for 1993-94 are as follows:

(a) The total cost of tax relief on investment income of occupational pension schemes is estimated to be about £5·1 billion. This includes £2 billion of tax credits issued with dividends of United Kingdom companies for occupational pensions funds.

(b) It is not possible to provide a total for relief on investment income in respect of personal pension schemes, though the total of tax credits issued with dividends is £0·75 billion for insurance companies on account of their pension funds. It is not possible to seperate this estimate between personal pensions and other pension business.

(c) Tax credits on dividends to charities total about £200 million. About £60 million of tax repayments for income received under deduction of tax were made to charities.

Lack of information on the length of time that pension funds hold various types of assets means that a reliable estimate of the cost of tax relief on capital gains of funds cannot be made.

Mr. Dan Smalley

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what communications Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has had with its United States counterparts in connection with the trial of Mr. Dan Smalley and his allegations about arms exports to Iran.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise has had no communications with its United States counterparts in connection with a Mr. Dan Smalley. However, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise had communications with United States Customs in 1982 and 1983 about the trial of Mr. Ian Smalley and his allegations about arms exports to Iran. No recent communications have taken place on this matter.

SCOTLAND

Forth Valley Health Board

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those consulted before the four new hospital units were built by Forth Valley health board;

(2) on what grounds the contract for the Forth Valley health board's community village project was awarded to Sir Norman Foster and Partners;

(3) if he will state the reasons why four new hospital units completed in autumn 1993 by Forth Valley health board have not been used;

(4) what is the cost of the modifications needed to the new hospital units built by Forth Valley health board;

(5) what defects there are in the newly built psychiatric units in Forth Valley health board.

Mr. Stewart: These are matters for Forth Valley health board.

Conservation

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of the sites of special scientific interest in (a) Scotland and (b) the Highland region are included in the list of possible special areas of conservation compiled by Scottish National Heritage;

(2) what proportion of the land area in (a) Scotland and (b) the Highland region is concerned by the list of possible special areas of conservation recently submitted to the Government.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on 12 April, Official Report, column 119-20.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will have regard to the economic, social and cultural requirements and regional and local characteristics of those areas included in the proposed list of special areas of conservation he has received from Scottish Natural Heritage when making his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Yes. However, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 April, Official Report, column 120, in which I made clear that the preliminary advice received from Scottish Natural Heritage does not constitute a list of proposed special areas of conservation.

Cervical Smear Tests

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the implementation by (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board and (b) the Scottish Office of the recommendations of the report into the maladministration of the cervical smear test programmes at the Inverclyde royal hospital, Greenock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Argyll and Clyde health board is implementing the recommendations addressed to it through a comprehensive purchasing plan based on service specifications for all components of the board's cervical screening programme including targets and quality control procedures. A purchasing plan has been approved by the board and the specification of service required has now been issued to provider units.

A task force is currently considering the feasibility and the implications of rationalising the cervical cytopathology services and an extensive consultation exercise is under way involving relevant laboratory consultants, clinicians and independent experts. The task force is expected to report with recommendations to the board by May.

Those recommendations addressed to the Scottish Office Home and Health Department are being taken forward. The Common Services Agency has been asked to set up the new central co-ordinating unit for cervical and breast screening services at a cost of £100,000 per annum. The post of national medical director to head the unit was advertised in December 1993 but it was not possible to appoint a suitable candidate. Arrangements are in hand to re-advertise the post for either a full-time or two part-time appointments. Work is proceeding on setting out a management framework and a programme of work for the central monitoring unit.

A working group to formulate the policy for implementation of internal quality control in all laboratories carrying out cervical cytopathology has been set up under the chairmanship of one of the Department's medical officers, and comprises members from the Royal College of Pathologists, the British Society of Clinical Cytology, the Institute of Biomedical Science and representatives from each of the three other United Kingdom Departments of Health. The Health Education Board for Scotland—HEBS—has produced a new promotional leaflet encouraging women to attend for screening. This was distributed to all GPs and clinics via health boards at the end of March.

Revised guidance, covering management responsibilities, quality controls, rationalisation of laboratories, staffing and appropriate levels of training is being prepared and will be issued following agreement with the appropriate professional bodies.

Progress on implementation of the recommendations will continue to be monitored by the management executive.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of the investigation conducted by Dr. Euphemia McGoogan and others into the maladministration of the cervical smear test programme at the Inverclyde Royal hospital, Greenock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 April 1994]: The cost of the inquiry including the publication of the report, into cervical cytopathology at Inverclyde Royal hospital, Greenock, conducted by Dr. McGoogan and the inquiry team, was £41,500.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations led him to collect centrally information on hospital closures.

Mr. Stewart: Health boards are required to submit proposals for hospital closures to the Secretary of State for Scotland for approval.

Executed Prisoners (Reburial)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many exhumations to allow reburial of executed prisoners have taken place since the abolition of capital punishment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 14 April 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of exhumations to allow reburial of executed prisoners which have taken place since the abolition of capital punishment.

Enquiries have been made at all prison establishments and no record has been found of any such exhumations having taken place.

Capital Convictions (Licences)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people reprieved from a capital conviction are now at large in the community on licence; and what is the rate of recall of such people.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Available records suggest that a total of five individuals are in the community on licence who were reprieved from a capital conviction before the abolition of the death penalty in 1965. Two of these people were recalled to custody, but subsequently re-released.

Two further persons reprieved from a capital conviction were recalled to custody and have not subsequently been re-released.

Electors

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish tables showing the total electorate, the number of (a) male and (b) female electors, the number of electors attaining the age of 18 years on the current register and the number of electors on the permanent absent voters register in each Euro-constituency, parliamentary constituency and regional electoral division in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has arranged for information about the total number of electors and attainers in the 1994 register of electors in each European parliamentary constituency, parliamentary constituency and regional electoral division in Scotland to be placed in the House Library. Information about electors by gender is not held centrally, nor is information about those electors who have been granted absent votes for an indefinite period.

NHS (Staff Cars)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on personal cars for staff in real and constant price terms in the NHS in Scotland in every year since 1979.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Non-medical Consultants

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the expenditure on non-medical consultants in the NHS in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Costs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs of administration in the national health service in Scotland, in real and constant price terms, in each year since 1979; and what percentage this took each year of total NHS expenditure.

Mr. Stewart: The information is set out in the table.

Year	Outturn: Administration costs (£ thousands)	Outturn: Total expenditure (£ thousands)	Outturn: Per cent.	Constant price terms[1]: Administration costs (£ thousands)	Constant price terms[1]: Total expenditure (£ thousands)	Constant price terms[1]: Per cent.

[1] The GDP deflator at market prices has been used to adjust the figures to constant price terms.
[2] Community health service administration costs for 1979-80 to 1981-82 were not identified separately in health boards' accounts.

NHS Managers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many managers have been employed in the national health service in each year since 1979.

Mr. Stewart: General management has been introduced into the national health service in Scotland progressively from 1986 onwards. The data available centrally on the number of staff employed as general and senior managers are given in the table. These figures include staff previously employed on senior nursing or administrative and clerical terms and conditions of service who are now employed on the terms and conditions applicable to general or senior managers.

NHS Public Relations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on public relations in the national health service in every year since 1979 in real and constant price terms.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last time a resident of Clydebank was appointed to the Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Stewart: Mrs. Margaret McGarry, a resident of Clydebank, was appointed to the Greater Glasgow health board in 1987 for a second four-year term.

Student Loans

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average debt of students in Scotland to the Student Loans Company Ltd.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company Ltd. and I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

It may not be possible for the company to distinguish between the different parts of the United Kingdom.

Hairmyres Hospital

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the average admission waiting times at Hairmyres hospital for each of the last five years for the departments of dermatology, urology, ophthalmology, ENT, gynaecology and orthopaedic.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The information, for which the mean waiting time for admission from the waiting list has been given, is shown in the table:

Police Functions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hours per week are worked by civilians in functions which were previously treated as police jobs (a) in total and (b) per civilian employee; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 April 1994]: The information requested is not available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which functions formerly performed by police officers have been transferred to civilians since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Any function performed by police officers which does not require the powers of a constable can in principle be transferred to civilians. Scottish police forces have recently been advised that the functions set out in the following table should normally be performed by civilians.

Administration and record keeping Animal health
Audiovisual technicians
CID administration
Communications (technical)
Computer Manager
Computer services
Criminal records
Divisional administration
Drivers
Driving instructors
Fingerprint department
Firearm registration (administration)
Fixed Penalty office
Force information officer
Force welfare officer
Forensic laboratory
Force Finance officer
Force property custodian
Home defence
Identification Branch (including Fingerprints)
Legal documents
Lost property
Photographic department
Public office
Road safety
Scene of Crime officer
School-crossing patrols administration
Station assistants
Support—Air, dogs, marine, mounted, special branch, ports
Support—general
Taxi-cab administration
Technical services and other equipment maintenance
Traffic administration
Traffic warden administration
Traffic warden superviser
Turnkeys/matrons
Vehicle fleet workshop or garage including supervisor
Wireless workshop

Out-patients (Waiting Times)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of patients are seen by a medical practitioner within (a) 30 minutes or (b) within one hour of their out-patient appointment time.

Mr. Stewart: Information on how long patients have to wait to be seen after their appointment time at out-patient clinics is monitored by health boards and is not collected centrally. Health boards report that few patients overall wait longer than 30 minutes; that where they do they are given an explanation and an indication of how much longer the wait is likely to be; and that where monitoring reveals a particular problem action is taken to remedy it.

Medical Negligence

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost of the proven cases of medical negligence in hospitals in each of the past 10 years; what was the average time of such cases to completion; in how many cases medical practitioners were (a) dismissed from the health service, (b) advised to retire or (c) suffered some other sanction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 April 1994]: The information requested on the cost of settlements in cases of medical negligence in hospitals in Scotland can be provided only from 1 January 1990 when financial responsibility for medical negligence was assumed by health boards. The costs, including claimants' costs, for this period were as follows:

1989-90	957,956
1990-91	1,290,968
1991-92	998,369
1992-93	1,091,489

Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available.

The length of time taken to settle such cases can vary depending on the nature of the case. If agreement is reached before a case reaches the courts, it can be settled within six to nine months of a claim being lodged. If a claim is determined by the courts, the average time taken to reach a conclusion is around five years.

Information on the number of cases in which medical practitioners were dismissed from the service, advised to retire or suffered some other sanction is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects information on medical negligence claims for 1992-93 to be made available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 April 1994]: The total amount of compensation payments for 1992-93, including claimants' costs, for all health boards and NHS trusts in Scotland in respect of the negligence of their medical and dental staff was £1,091,489.

Inverclyde Royal Hospital Trust

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of a detailed statement of the financial accounts of the Inverclyde royal hospital trust since its inception;

(2) what analysis he made of the financial viability of the Inverclyde Royal hospital application for trust status before giving it approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Inverclyde Royal NHS trust became operational only from 1 April 1994 and its accounts will not be available until after the end of its first year. The trust is required to produce an annual report including accounts in respect of its first year of operation by September 1995. This is a public document which will be published by the trust.

A thorough analysis of the finances of Inverclyde Royal hospital involving financial consultants was made during the public consultation period on the hospital's trust application. This concluded that the hospital was financially viable and there is nothing to suggest otherwise.

Gourock Ropeworks

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the present circumstances of the Gourock ropeworks in Port Glasgow and its likely future use.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Consideration of the possible future use of the ropeworks building continues to involve Inverclyde district council, Renfrewshire Enterprise and Scottish Home, as well as Historic Scotland which reports to me for my interest in the ropeworks as a listed building.

I intend to write to the hon. Member on this constituency matter.

Hospital Trusts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements have been made for the maintenance of pension funds for staff employed at (a) Inverclyde royal hospital trust and (b) other hospital trusts elsewhere in Scotland, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Employees transfer to national health service trusts on their existing terms and conditions and have the same rights to membership of the statutory national health service superannuation scheme as other national health service employees. New staff recruited by the trusts also have the same rights to membership. Their contributions to the scheme, and those of their employers, are payable to the Exchequer to fund the benefits under the scheme.

Blood

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what profits the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service made on the sale of blood to private hospitals or health care organisations in each of the last five years; at what price blood was sold in each year; what happens to the profits; and what steps are taken to inform people giving blood to the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service that their blood is to be sold to private hospitals or health care organisations.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service does not sell blood or blood products and therefore the matter of profit does not arise. Where blood or blood products are supplied to non-national health service hospitals, the administrative and other costs are recovered in the form of a handling charge. Literature is available at donor sessions to explain that a proportion of blood donated may be used to treat non-national health service patients but only where this can be done without detriment to the national health service.

EMPLOYMENT

European Social Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what representations he has had from voluntary organisations about the financial difficulties caused to them by the system of funding for ESF projects; and what action he proposes to take;

(2) what steps he has taken to give voluntary organisations an indication about whether their European social fund projects which started on 1 January last will be funded; and what are the reasons for this policy;

(3) what representations he has made to the European Union about the practice of retrospective funding for ESF projects; and what assurances he has had about improvements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been a number of representations from voluntary sector organisations concerned about the delay in agreeing plans with the Commission and the consequent effect on money being released from Brussels. This concern is shared by the United Kingdom Government who continue to put pressure on the Commission to respond formally to the objective 3 plan which was submitted last November.

The United Kingdom Government agreed to arrangements that allowed requests for expenditure received by the European Commission by 30 April 1994 against agreed priorities to be regarded as eligible for assistance from the Structural Funds—including European social fund—backdated to 1 January 1994. Plans for objectives 1, 2, 3 and 5b have either been submitted or will be submitted to the Commission by the end of April. However, until plans have been agreed with the Commission it is not possible to approve formally any projects for 1994. No resources can be made available for individual projects until funds are received from the Commission.

For all objectives, the 1993 operational year was extended until 31 March 1994 to allow activity to continue following representations from applicant organisations,. This has helped voluntary organisations, among others, to continue their work.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date in each of the past five years voluntary organisations were told whether they had funding for European social fund projects starting on 1 January of that year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no single date in any year when voluntary organisations are given approval for European social fund—ESF—funding. A timetable is agreed between the ESF unit and voluntary sector co-ordinators or regional secretariats for submitting applications. This is dependent on the United Kingdom receiving formal decisions from the Commission. Once applications are received, the ESF unit aims to process them within six weeks. We give top priority to the processing of voluntary sector applications.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown in financial and percentage terms of how ESF funding is allocated to his Department's projects, local authority projects, voluntary organisation and other projects in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following table sets out the information requested:

Allocations

	1991		1992		1993
	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.
Local authorities	123·31	33·53	131·24	34·76	217·59	34·87

Total	367·75	100·00	377·57	100·00	624·01	100·00

Information for 1990 broken down by sector could be obtained only by manual analysis at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1989 are available only from the Commission. All money allocated in 1990 which was not taken up was carried forward for use in 1991.

The figures for 1991 and 1992 relate to the final amounts paid to the sectors, whereas those for 1993 relate to amounts originally approved, since final claims for the programmes in question have not yet been submitted.

The figures for Community initiatives between 1991 and 1993 are included in the 1993 figures.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much ESF funding has been allocated in real and constant price terms to the Scottish voluntary sector in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information about European social fund support to the Scottish voluntary sector is set out in the following table. The Employment Department took over responsibility for the administration and payment of applications for ESF from the European Commission with effect from the 1990 calendar year; information prior to this is only available from the Commission.

	Cash (£)	1990 prices (£)
1990	5,574,325	5,574,325
1991	8,322,510	7,866,267
1992	10,267,161	9,283,147
1993	18,736,309	16,377,892

Notes:

1. Figures for 1990-92 are amounts claimed at final claim stage, while for 1993 the figure is the amount originally approved since final claims for the programmes in question have not yet been submitted.
2. 1990 prices calculated using the GDP deflator at factor cost.

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many ACAS offices operate in the United Kingdom; and if he will list them by geographical location.

Miss Widdecombe: There are currently 13 ACAS offices operating in the United Kingdom, grouped together in seven ACAS regions in England, together with Scotland and Wales. The offices are:

London region: London
Midlands region: Birmingham, Nottingham
Northern region: Newcastle

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total number of referrals made to ACAS in each of the past five years.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of referrals and requests for assistance made to ACAS in the last five years is as published in the ACAS annual reports for the years 1988 to 1992. These are as follows:

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Requests for collective conciliation	1,059	1,164	1,260	1,386	1,207
Referrals to ACAS arbitration	138	169	200	157	162
Requested advisory mediation work	985	1,144	964	947	787
Individual conciliation cases	44,443	48,817	52,071	60,605	72,166
Public enquiries	315,601	349,324	418,394	466,954	487,778

The figures for 1993 will be available in June 1994, when the ACAS annual report 1993 is expected to be published.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently in work; what the figure was in 1979 and 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is shown in the following table:

Workforce in employment: United Kingdom (Seasonally adjusted)

	(Thousands)
December 1975	24,927
December 1979	25,485
December 1993[1]	25,017

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each year since 1984 the number of people in Great Britain surveyed by the labour force survey who, although they are without a job, have looked for a job within the four weeks prior to their labour force survey interview or are waiting to start a job they had already obtained, were not available to start a job within the two weeks following their labour force survey interview, and the number of people who were neither in employment nor unemployed on the International Labour Organisation measure but who said they wold like a job.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Both of the categories asked for in the question are defined as 'economically inactive' according to International Labour Organisation guidelines. Estimates from the labour force survey for the spring of each year since 1984 of the numbers in each group are given in the following table.

As shown by the analyses of these groups routinely published in the LFS help line section of the Employment Gazette, the majority of people who say they want work but are not actively seeking it are students; looking after a family or home; or long term sick or disabled.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many indices of unemployment are calculated by each of the countries in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The results of a survey of the more commonly used unemployment measures in 16 countries were published in the September 1992 Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library. To extend this to all OECD countries would incur disproportionate costs.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the unemployment statistics used in the Government's submission to the G7 jobs summit in Detroit, "Competitiveness and Employment: The UK Approach" represented the level of unemployment in the United Kingdom, or the monthly claimant count; and if they were validated by the director of statistics in his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Charts 4A and 4B in "The UK Approach" show unemployment rates which use the claimant count as the numerator. Figures based on the claimant count have the advantage of being monthly, up-to-date and available for a long run of years. The charts used figures from published sources. The director of statistics is responsible for the quality of all Employment Department labour market statistics published by the Government Statistical Service.

The latest available labour force survey results, for autumn 1993, show a seasonally adjusted International Labour Organisation unemployment rate for Great Britain of 10·1 per cent.—close to the rate shown in chart 4B for that period.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many changes to the method of calculating the monthly unemployment register and the claimant count there have been since the Government took office in 1979; and what has been the statistical effect on the count of each change at the time the change took place.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 26 October 1992, Official Report, column 496. Since that reply was given there has been one additional discontinuity.

In February 1994 the Northern Ireland system for administering unemployment benefits was fully integrated into the computerised national unemployment benefit system—NUBS—which has been operating throughout the rest of the United Kingdom since 1983. The changeover eliminated an overcount in the Northern Ireland figures leading to a slight downward revision of about 1,500 to the unadjusted level of claimant unemployment in Northern Ireland, and likewise to the United Kingdom figures.

Appropriate revisions have been made for past periods to maintain the consistency of the seasonally adjusted series. Full details are given on page S16 of the April Employment Gazette, which is available in the Library.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the labour force survey as a representation of the level of unemployment in the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to improve it.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As with any sample survey, estimates from the labour force survey are subject to sampling variability and "confidence intervals" are published with the results.

The LFS measures unemployment according to the ILO definition, which is used extensively by industrial countries throughout the world and by international organisations. While EC regulations require all member states to conduct an annual LFS, Britain has opted to conduct the survey on a quarterly basis to ensure more up-to-date results.

Official statisticians are always seeking ways of improving the quality and speed of publication of their surveys. For example, the introduction of computer assisted interviewing in the LFS has led to higher data quality and an improvement in the speed of publication of the results to just over three months from the end of the survey period.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his definition of the claimant count; and what assessment he has made of the claimant count as an accurate measure of the level of unemployment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The monthly claimant unemployment count covers all those people claiming unemployment-related benefits, that is unemployment benefit, income support or national insurance credits at Employment Service local offices, who declare for each day they claim that they are unemployed, capable of work, available for work and actively seeking employment.

Students claiming benefit during a vacation and who intend to return to full-time education, and temporarily stopped workers, are excluded.

The count is accurate at both national and local level because it is a by-product of the system for paying unemployment-related benefits and is a 100 per cent. count. Both the claimant count measure of unemployment and the internationally comparable measure produced by the labour force survey have shown similar trends over recent years and, since spring 1992, the two measures have been at similar levels.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the estimate of the level of unemployment in the United Kingdom in (a) February 1994 and (b) February 1979;

(2) what was the seasonally adjusted unemployment claimant count for February for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the regions in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; and what were the comparable figures on the current series with the figures for February 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is available from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the cost to increase the frequency of the labour force survey from every quarter to every month; and if he will do so.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The existing quarterly labour force survey costs about £8 million per year. Although no detailed assessment has been made, to increase the survey's frequency to every month, while maintaining the sample size, would lead to an approximately threefold increase in the survey's costs.

A switch to a LFS providing estimates for individual months would require a re-design of the existing quarterly survey, which would take up to two years to implement.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the seasonally adjusted figure published for registered unemployment for February 1979 using the series existing in February 1979 for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the regions in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Prior to 1982 the monthly unemployment figures were based on the number of registrants at jobcentres, not all of whom were claiming benefits. When registration at a jobcentre became voluntary and threatened the integrity of the count the basis of the figures was changed to become a count of those claiming unemployment-related benefits at Employment Service local offices—formerly unemployment benefit offices. The figures given in the table relate to the former basis and are not comparable with the consistent, seasonally adjusted, claimant count figures for the same period.

HEALTH

NHS (Private Finance)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all those national health service projects worth over £250,000 which have been financed by private sector money since February 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The private finance initiative is helping the national health service to capture the skills and expertise of the private sector to give better services, higher quality and more resources for the NHS. Private finance will mean additional capital spending on top of the £2·1 billion public capital in 1994-95. New delegated limits for the NHS, introduced in April 1993, have removed obstacles that were inhibiting effective use of private finance. Only schemes with a capital cost over £1 million must be submitted centrally and, therefore, information is not available centrally on all schemes with a capital cost over £250,000. The table lists 20 schemes of over £1 million capital cost which have been approved since February 1993.

NHS projects using private capital over £1 million approved since February 1993

Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow Health Agency: lease of office accommodation.
Yorkshire Regional Health Authority: clinical waste incineration.
Hastings and Rother NHS Trust: Conquest Hospital staff residences.
West Middlesex Hospital: endoscopy unit.
North Bedfordshire Health Authority: residential accommodation at Steppingley and Biggleswade.
Bolton Health Authority: clinical waste incineration.
New River Health Authority: lease of office accommodation.
Leicester Mental Health Services: lease of new Trust Headquarters.
United Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust: generating station.
William Harvey Hospital (Ashford): clinical waste incineration.
Barnet Health Authority: residential accommodation in Hendon.
Plymouth and Torbay Health Authority: clinical waste incineration.
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority: staff residences at Carlton Gate.
East Sussex Health Authority: residential accommodation for continuing care of the elderly.
Brent and Harrow Health Authority: provision of residential accommodation.
Doncaster Healthcare NHS Trust: clinical waste incineration.
Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust: staff accommodation.
St. James' NHS Trust, Leeds: combined heat and power plant.
Hertfordshire Health Agency: lease of office accommodation.
Hillingdon Health Agency: lease of office accommodation.

Domiciliary Care Agencies

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to implement a system of registration and inspection of domiciliary care agencies.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities are already able to inspect such agencies on a voluntary basis. We have no current plans to introduce compulsory registration of domiciliary care agencies, but we will review the position next year as part of our overall review of inspection.

Correspondence

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Worcestershire, South of 18 March asking her to state the intended publication date of the Bloomfield report on proposals for dental remuneration.

Dr. Mawhinney: I replied to the hon. Member's letter on 13 April.

Nurses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what expressions of concern she has received about the pay levels of junior nurses;

(2) what representations she has received from the nursing organisations regarding hours and conditions of nurses and junior nurses.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current annual average working hours for nurses; and what were the figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The normal working hours for all whole-time nurses employed under Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council terms and conditions are 37·5 per week, any additional hours worked would be at the request of the employing authority. Information on annual average working hours is not available centrally.

Dental Services

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will be giving the Government's response to the Bloomfield report on general dental services in the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 February at column 1042.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from (a) the public and (b) the dental profession concerning the timing of the response to the Bloomfield report and the oral health strategy; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have recently received written representations from some members of the dental profession and a few from the public concerning the timing of our announcement of proposals for the national health service dental service.

Health Services (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the waiting list on Merseyside for treatment of arthritis; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment by specialty and by regional health authority, district health authority and trust is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", which is published twice yearly. The latest figures are for September 1993 and copies are available in the Library.

Information on waiting times to first out-patient appointment is not yet collected centrally.

Health Services (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans there are to establish a rheumatology service for the Merseyside region; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what special facilities are provided for the treatment of psoriasis on Merseyside.

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities and general practitioner fundholders are responsible, as the purchasers of health care, for ensuring that patients have access to a comprehensive range of hospital and community health services. There are well-developed services for the treatment of psoriasis and rheumatology for the people of Merseyside. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of North West regional health authority, for details of existing services and any plans for their development.

St. Helens Hospital

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what complaints she has received from (a) elected Members and (b) patients from the St. Helens and Knowsley area concerning the waiting times at St. Helens hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not aware of any such complaints. No patients have to wait longer than one year for in-patient or day case treatment at the St. Helen's and Knowsley hospitals national health service trust, and 80 per cent. are seen within six months.

Abbots Langley Hospital

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with Abbots Langley hospital with regard to the pension arrangements for staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Private Prescriptions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Norfolk family health services authority regarding private prescriptions; and what guidelines she has issued to FHSAs on the subject.

Dr. Mawhinney: An official in the Department has recently had a conversation with Norfolk family health services authority about private prescriptions. Guidance will be issued to all FHSAs shortly.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department undertakes of the amount of private prescriptions being dispensed; and if she will provide a breakdown by FHSA of the number of private prescriptions dispensed, and the price at which they were dispensed.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. These transactions are outwith the national health service.

NHS Pensions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to health authorities and trusts as respects the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 with regard to pensions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service executive issued guidance on the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the NHS in November 1993. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library. This guidance includes specific references to pensions and an appendix which provides advice on evaluation of pensions comparability and the assessment of pension packages.

Family Health Services Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the projected outturn is for each family health services authority for 1993-94; and by how much this varies from the planned expenditure for each authority.

Mr. Sackville: Details of individual family health services authority expenditure against cash limits in 1993-94 will not be available until annual accounts are submitted. Information on projected outturn for individual authorities is not collected, but is available from regional health authorities.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer given by the Under-Secretary of State on 24 March, Official Report, column 416, on what basis a family health services authority can refuse to require general practitioners to provide cover to respite centres and similar community care facilities.

Dr. Mawhinney: A family health services authority may require a general practitioner included in its medical list to provide treatment to an individual at any place in his practice area, provided there is no other doctor who, at the time of the request, is under an obligation to give treatment to that person. However, FHSAs are not required, or to require general practitioners on their medical lists, to provide general medical services cover to organisations as a whole.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued to family health services authorities, voluntary groups and local authorities relating to general practitioner cover for day centres, respite centres and other community care facilities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance on ensuring that people attending various care centres have access to general practitioner services has been issued to family health services authorities and other bodies in health circular HSG 92/42 and local authority circulars 92/15 and 88/15, copies of which are available in the Library.

General Practitioners

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information regarding the income of fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners is held centrally.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is available centrally on the aggregate value of fees and allowances and directly reimbursed expenses paid to general practitioners; and on the number of general practitioners. These data are collected by family health services authority area and do not separately identify payments to fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is held centrally regarding the staff employed by general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the numbers and categories of staff employed by general practitioners is collected bi-annually from family health services authorities and published on a regional basis in "General Medical Services Basic Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. Details are also collected of the total proportional reimbursements made by FHSAs to general practitioners of the staff costs they incur.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the general practitioner fundholding practices in South Yorkshire; and if she will give the total spent out of the allocation for each practice for 1992-93 and the current year to date.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 28 March 1994, c. 592]: I regret that my previous reply was incorrect. The information provided should have related to Trent rather than Yorkshire regional health authority. The answer should therefore have read:

There will be 286 fundholding practices in the Trent region from 1 April 1994, covering 44 per cent. of the population. Regional health authorities are responsible for managing the general practitioner fundholding scheme in their areas. For local information about South Yorkshire the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, chairman of the Trent regional health authority.

NHS Reforms (London)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much was spent by her Department in writing, designing, printing and distributing the leaflet "NHS Changes in London—Answers To The Questions You've Been Asking";

(2) to how many households her Department intends to distribute the leaflet "NHS Changes in London—Answers To The Questions You've Been Asking";

(3) which Minister approved the contents of the leaflet "NHS Changes in London—Answers To The Questions You've Been Asking";

(4) which Minister agreed the timing of the distribution of the leaflet "NHS Changes in London—Answers To The Questions You've Been Asking"; and how that timing was agreed upon.

Dr. Mawhinney: The estimated cost of producing and distributing the leaflet is £150,000. It has been distributed to approximately 3·28 million households within the M25. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and her ministerial team approved the content of the leaflet and the timing of the distribution.

Private Hospitals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many GP fundholders have contracts with independent private hospitals;

(2) how many GP fundholders refer a majority of their national health service patients to private or independent hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 7 February, Official Report, column 52.

NHS Expenditure

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current total expenditure within the national health service on treatment purchased from independent or private hospitals; and how much is spent by FHSAs and GP fundholders.

Mr. Sackville: In 1992-93, the latest year for which figures are available, the total expenditure by national health service trusts, regional and district health authorities and family health services authorities on purchase of healthcare from non-national health service providers was £268·23 million.

Included in the figure above is £13·13 million expenditure by general practitioner fundholders on hospital services from non-national health service providers. FHSAs have no expenditure in respect of hospital services other than that incurred by fundholders.

Notes:

1. Expenditure is not analysed to identify precisely purchases from independent or private hospitals. The figures are for "purchase of healthcare" from bodies "other than NHS bodies".
2. The figures are provisional: the summarised accounts are subject to audit by the National Audit Office.
3. Source: (i) Annual accounts of FHSAs; and Regional, District and London Postgraduate Teaching Hospitals (Special Health Authorities) 1992-93; (ii) National health service trusts' financial returns 1992-93.

NHS (Private Patients)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private patients were treated within national health service hospitals in 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Preliminary indications for 1992-93 are that private patients accounted for around 100,000 finished consultant episodes in national health service hospitals in England, or about 1 per cent. of total episodes.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 15 April 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Courts Service

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his plans for privatisation in the courts service; what plans he has to achieve them within the terms of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill; and what plans he has to seek the repeal of section 27 of the Courts Act 1971 before the contracting out or privatising of the courts service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no plans either to privatise any part of the court service in the sense of the private sector taking over responsibility for ensuring the provision of court services or to repeal section 27 of the Courts Act 1971. However, the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill would amend that section to enable the Lord Chancellor to contract with others to provide staff to carry out administrative work in the Supreme Court and county courts and hence enable him to market-test any such work where doing so was likely to improve the value for money of the services concerned and would not risk impugning the independence or probity of the judicial process. The Government have decided, however, that there will be no market testing in the courts service at least until it has been launched as an executive agency in April 1995.

Defendants (Custody)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the recommended period that a defendant can be held in custody before Crown court trial; if he will indicate the trend in achieving this target; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Pursuant to the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, the maximum period of time an individual may be held in custody between committal for trial and arraignment is 112 days—16 weeks. The table shows the trend in achieving the limit. In addition, the Department sets custody waiting time targets which are 12 weeks in London, 10 weeks in the south-eastern area and eight weeks elsewhere in England and Wales.

Custody waiting times

	Percentage of defendants dealt with within 16 weeks	Average waiting time (weeks)
1989	84	10·1
1990	84	10·0
1991	84	10·0
[1]1992	82	11·1
[1]1993	77·1	12·59

[1] Provisional figures.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what rights of audience barristers directly employed by the Crown Prosecution Service have in the Crown court; and what plans he has to alter such rights.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Barristers employed by the Crown Prosecution Service have no rights of audience in the Crown court.

The Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct is at present considering this issue, and no decision on the rights of audience of employed barristers will be taken until the advisory committee's advice is received. This is expected later this year.

Principles of Justice

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what codification of the principles of justice has taken place since 1979; and what proposals he has for further codification.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No legislation of a purely codifying nature has been enacted since 1979. However, some legislation emanating from recommendations by the Law Commission, such as the Children Act 1989, has been drafted in the context of codification of the area of the law to which it relates. The Government are considering a draft codifying Bill on offences against the person and general principles, which was published by the Law Commission in 1993—Law Com. No. 218.

Judges

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges were (a) barristers and (b) solicitors; and if he will make a statement on the trends in appointments.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As at 1 April 1994 there were 509 circuit judges in office, of whom 449 had been barristers and 60 had been solicitors at the time of their appointment. There were 95 High Court judges of whom 94 had been barristers and one a solicitor. All other Supreme Court judges had been barristers and all Lords of Appeal had been barristers or members of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland. By comparison, as at 1 October 1991, 46 out of the 446 circuit judges and none of the more senior judges in office had been solicitors at the time of their appointment. It continues to be the Lord Chancellor's policy to appoint to each judicial post the candidate who appears to him to be best qualified to fill it.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Compensation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners how many (a) inquiries and (b) detailed applications have been made for compensation under the Priests (Ordination of Women) Measure 1993.

Mr. Allison: A total of 836 individuals have sought and received information about the Ordination of Women (Financial Provisions) Measure. Very few have given any indication of their actual intentions; 177 individuals have resigned or indicated their firm intention to do so, with a view to receiving financial provision under the Measure.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia (Aid)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the aid and trade provision programme has been absorbed by Indonesia in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table provides details drawn from "British Aid Statistics" for the calendar years up to 1990; and for the financial years from 1991 onwards.

Indonesia percentage of ATP expenditure

	Per cent.
Calendar years
1980	Nil
1981	Nil
1982	4·8
1983	8·8
1984	11·4
1985	46·4
1986	0·1
1987	3·5
1988	2·0
1989	2·2
1990	3·9
Financial years
1991-92	10·7
1992-93	10·5

Acer Engineering

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid-trade projects have been awarded to Acer Engineering since 1990; and in how many other such projects Acer Engineering acted as a subcontractor or consultant.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Acer Engineering has not been the lead contractor for any project supported with aid and trade provision finance since 1990. Data are not held centrally on subcontractors or consultants employed by lead contractors under aid and trade provision-supported contracts, and such information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments of compensation have been made in connection with the Pergau dam project to the state Government of Kelantan and to local landowners; and by whom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that Tenaga Nasional Berhad—the publicly listed Malaysian Electricity Company—agreed in 1992 to pay compensation to the Kelantan State Government for the use of land and water and loss of timber revenue. This amounted to just over M$121 million—£28 million. We understand that compensation has also been paid to local landowners although we are not aware of the amount.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make available the most up-to-date analyses of the environmental impact of the Pergau dam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: ODA continues to monitor the environmental effects of this project. It is not our policy to publish advisers' reports but, following a recent monitoring visit by an ODA adviser, the main conclusions were that the Malaysian environmental management plan is being effectively implemented and that the Pergau project will not have an adverse long-term environmental impact.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost to public funds of the specialist consultants appointed by the Overseas Development Administration to monitor progress on the Pergau dam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We expect to spend a total of £1·035 million up to the 1996-97 financial year on technical, financial and environmental monitoring of the implementation of the project.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he had over the military implications of the Pergau dam project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 12 April 1994]: None.

Iraq

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the consequences of the sanctions on Iraq on the food consumption of the civilian population;

(2) what assessment he has made of the consequences of the sanctions on Iraq on the repair of water purification and sewage plants that were destroyed in the Gulf war;

(3) what assessment he has made of the change in the incidence of water-borne diseases and other diseases since the imposition of sanctions on Iraq;

(4) what assessment he has made of the change in the incidence of infant mortality since the imposition of sanctions on Iraq.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: We have made no assessments of our own. Iraq is continuing to refuse access to the UN special rapporteur on human rights in Iraq and UN human rights monitors. We do, however, receive reports from UN agencies and non-governmental organisations with their assessments of needs in Iraq. It is on the basis of these assessments that we have provided some £66 million humanitarian aid to the Iraqi people since 1991.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which refugees are leaving Burma as a result of actions of the Burmese Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees that at present there is no significant movement of refugees from Burma into neighbouring countries.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the World Health Organisation's plan for the development of health services in Somaliland will be produced; and what plans exist to make it available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Health Organisation has informed us that the plan is expected to be made public by the end of April. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to arrange for a senior official of the Foreign Office to visit the marshlands of Iraq, in the area where the Tigris joins the Euphrates, to be accompanied by a medical officer experienced in water-borne malnutrition-related diseases and an expert in water filtering and pumping equipment.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 April 1994]: Many international organisations and humanitarian workers have sought to visit these areas to aid civilians. However, Iraq has consistently refused to permit access, despite the fact that this is in contravention of the United Nations Security Council resolution 688.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make an analysis for each quintile of pensioner incomes for single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner units similar to that published on 7 May 1993, Official Report, columns 294-98, using the most recent family expenditure survey figures available.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the tables.

[1]Indicates that sample sizes are too small to provide reliable estimates. Figures are shown only to demonstrate how totals are arived at.

1. All figures before housing costs (BHC) unless otherwise stated. After housing costs=AHC.
2. All average amounts are means except where otherwise stated.
3. Components may not sum to totals owing to rounding.
4. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
5. Estimates of percentage growth are based on unrounded income figures and may not therefore be the same as those calculated from the rounded amounts shown in the table.
6. Estimates of growth in total net incomes by quintile are based on medians. Estimates of growth of components of income and total incomes of all pensioners are based on means.

Notes to tables 2 to 5:

1. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
2. A Recently Retired pensioner unit is defined as a single pensioner aged less than five years above SPA or a pensioner couple where the husband is aged less than five years above SPA.
3. Where boxes have been joined together this signifies that due to low numbers of sample cases, an estimate has to be given for a number of combined quantiles.
4. All amounts are given at January 1991 prices.
5. Tables 1 and 3 are based on the seperate income distributions for single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner units respectively. Tables 2 and 4 are based on seperate income distrubtions for recently-retired single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner units respectively.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration has been given to the publication of the collection and enforcement manual of the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: There are no plans to publish the child support collection and enforcement manual.

Youth Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many youth training recipients have become eligible for top-up payments to bring them up to income support level and for welfare benefits since 11 April; and what will be the cost to public funds.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. Many YT trainees have access to resources beyond their YT allowance—earnings from employers, for example. Without knowledge of such resources, it is not possible to say how many young people might now be entitled to income support.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had with the voluntary organisations specialising in halfway houses, hostels and supported housing for former residents of institutions catering for those with learning difficulties in relation to the future provision of housing benefit, inclusive of the cost of support and care.

Mr. Hague: In order to restore the existing policy intention, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently consulted the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations on a proposed change to the regulations relating to eligibility for housing benefit where rent includes the cost of general counselling and support.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Force

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons currently hold the rank of (a) constable, (b) sergeant, (c) inspector, (d) chief inspector, (e) superintendent, (f) chief superintendent, (g) assistant chief constable and (h) deputy chief constable in each of the police forces in England and Wales other than the Metropolitan police.

Blasphemy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many actions have been brought for the offence of blasphemy since 1964; and how many resulted in a conviction.

Mr. Maclean: Records held centrally show only one prosecution brought since 1964 for blasphemy offences. This prosecution resulted in a conviction.

Overstaying

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 612, if he will make it his policy to collect centrally statistics by country on the number of visitors to the United Kingdom who overstay.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Such statistics could be collected only if there were comprehensive records of all arrivals and departures of non-European Economic Area nationals, of whom about 6·5 million are visitors to the United Kingdom each year. Maintaining such a database would not be cost-effective.

Firearm Certificates

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total sum received in England and Wales for (a) firearm certificates and (b) shotgun certificates during 1993 or the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1992, the most recent year for which figures are available, the total sum received in England and Wales was £2,258,600 for firearm certificates and £2,730,200 for shotgun certificates.

Racially Motivated Harassment

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentages of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 in each year since 1987 were for racially motivated harassment;

(2) how many prosecutions there have been under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 in each year since 1987; how many convictions there have been in each year since 1987; and what were the penalties for those convicted in each case.

Mr. Maclean: Information is not collected centrally as to whether an offence committed under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 was racially motivated.

The table shows the number of prosecutions, convictions and type of disposal given for offences under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 from 1987 to 1992. 1993 data will not be available until the autumn.

Number of defendants prosecuted, convicted and type of disposal given for offences under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 from 1987 to 1992 England and Wales

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Prosecutions	12,660	32,493	37,358	36,632	30,247	27,796
Convictions	9,490	24,079	26,828	25,193	19,478	16,541
Total sentenced	9,475	24,056	26,794	25,206	19,475	16,541
Type of disposal
Absolute or conditional discharge	1,249	3,054	4,009	4,046	3,801	4,052
Fine	7,673	19,647	21,596	20,091	14,378	11,746
Community sentences[1]	125	283	289	251	214	148

[1] Includes probation orders, supervision orders, community service orders, attendance centre orders and from 1 October 1992 combination orders.
[2] Includes fully suspended sentences.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the sites for the new secure training centres will be well away from residential areas;

(2) when he expects to announce the chosen sites for the five new secure training centres for persistent juvenile offenders subject to a secure training order.

Mr. Maclean: I hope to be able to announce a decision next week about the sites for the new centres.

Detention Centre, Gringley

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the empty detention centre at Gringley near Retford, Nottinghamshire is still available for sale; and if he will consider selling the site to a consortium of local residents.

Mr. Maclean: No. The site was withdrawn from sale by the Prison Service pending an assessment of its potential use as a secure training centre.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the reason for the closure of the former Gringley detention centre, near Retford; how many inmates it held; and how many people were employed there.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Joe Ashton, dated 15 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the closure of the former Gringley detention centre.

Gringley detention centre was closed in March 1988, as, following the discontinuance of detention centres, the site was too small and uneconomical for any alternative use by the Prison Service.

When it operated as a detention centre, it had a certified normal accommodation of 72.

It is not possible to provide precise details of staff numbers, as Gringley was operated as a satellite of Hatfield, then an open establishment for young prisoners. It is estimated that a total of about 35 staff were normally required to cover the shift system and support services which operated at Gringley.

Prisoners, Northumbria

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently held in police cells in the Northumbrian police force area; and why they are not held in prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. A. J. Beith, dated 15 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners currently held in police cells in the Northumbria police area and why they are not held in prisons.

On 12 April 1994, the latest date for which complete information is available, 23 prisoners were held in police cells in the Northumbria police area.

Since 1 January 1994, the prison population in England and Wales has risen by over 3,000. This has caused considerable pressure on local prison accommodation, particularly in the North of England.

Since 14 February 1994, there have been insufficient places available at Durham prison for all those committed to prison custody from courts in its catchment area.

HEALTH

Health Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the financial savings of moving activity from secondary to primary health care.

Dr. Mawhinney: The balance between secondary and primary care is for local decision taking into account local needs and resources, existing provision, and the views of local people.

Ethnic Monitoring

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ethnic monitoring is undertaken by her Department within the national health service and within training providers associated with the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the ethnic origin of nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff was first collected in September 1993. Results should be available in mid 1994. Ethnic origin information for the remainder of the national health service non-medical work force will be collected in September 1994.

Data on the ethnic background of doctors in the hospital and community health services is also collected by the Department. The NHS executive has just set up a central monitoring programme in England and Wales to examine the outcome of NHS consultant appointments in terms of gender and ethnic origin of applicants.

From later this year, the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting will collect data from approved institutions offering nursing, midwifery and health visiting qualifications.

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 623, if she will list, for each campaign that does not include advertising, the objectives and mechanisms for assessing the effectiveness of the campaign and the results of such assessments.

Mr. Sackville: The additional information requested has been included in revised tables which have been placed in the Library. The results of assessments for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what medical facilities in Britain have recently been offered to victims of the war in Bosnia; and what plans she has to increase these.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the beginning of this year 17 casualties from Bosnia have been treated for a variety of medical and surgical conditions in appropriate national health service hospitals. To date, all placements have been arranged through regional health authorities in England but the Department has maintained liaison with the other territorial health departments.

It is generally accepted that the overriding need now is to build up the capacity to provide sustainable health care within the former Yugoslavia. Nevertheless, we are continuing to respond to requests for individual cases to be treated here when special need arises because of a lack of the necessary facilities locally.

Domiciliary Care Agencies

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the provision of legal powers for professionals to intervene where an abusive situation in a domiciliary care agency cannot be alleviated by other means.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Departmental Office Space, Ipswich

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many square feet of office space her Department leases, rents or owns inside the boundary of the borough of Ipswich; and what was the equivalent area in June 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has no office accommodation in Ipswich which it rents or owns.

Suffolk health authority and Suffolk family health services authority occupy office premises on the Saint Clements hospital site, leased from East Suffolk Local Health Services National Health Service Trust.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the recruitment to the national health service of more junior doctors.

Dr. Mawhinney: The new deal will further reduce hours worked by junior doctors. To help achieve these reductions, regional task forces have been given the freedom to increase senior house officer numbers where necessary, in consultation with postgraduate deans, to ensure that educational standards are maintained.

The number of junior doctors will change as a result of the Government's acceptance of the recommendations of "Hospital Doctors: Training for the Future". This will introduce planned and structured training and increase the ratio of senior medical staff to junior doctors. Over the next few years, this should reduce the numbers in higher specialist training but increase the number of consultants and the proportion of care delivered by them.

Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Ambulances

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to encourage the purchase and use of ambulances manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: The sourcing and purchase of ambulances by competitive tender is a matter for each individual ambulance service, having regard to operational requirements, availability in the marketplace, and best overall value for money.

Birth Defects

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will seek a report on the relationship between the incidence of birth defects and the transmission of viruses carried by sea water contaminated with sewage effluent; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There are no known links between viral infections of any type, including viruses transmitted through sea water, and limb reduction deformities at birth. There are therefore no plans to commission a study along the lines suggested.

With regard to investigations into reports of unusual occurrences of babies born with limb defects, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) on 1 March at column 678.

General Practitioners (Mobile Phones)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to subsidise calls made or received by general practitioners on mobile phones in the course of their duties when on call.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenses incurred by general practitioners in the delivery of general medical services are reimbursed to the profession in full.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines her Department has issued to general practitioners in relation to the use and charging of calls received on mobile phones from patients when on call.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

NHS Leaflet

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many typical modern health centres, as described in her Department's leaflet, "NHS Changes in London—Answers to the Questions You've Been Asking" have been established in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health centres are managed by local health authorities and community trusts and detailed information is therefore not available centrally. Analysis of primary care development plans received from health authorities within the London implementation zone indicates that 24 capital projects involving health centres were established during 1993-94 and a further 33 building developments are planned for 1994-95. Seventy-four additional service improvement initiatives have been identified which will extend primary care provision by introducing dental, orthopaedic, occupational or psychiatric health care within a general practitioner setting. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 18 January at column 525. This provided a list of all the LIZ-funded primary care projects established in 1993-94.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new minor injury units there will be in central London, as described in the leaflet, "NHS Changes in London—Answers to the Questions You've Been Asking".

Dr. Mawhinney: At present there are two minor injury units in central London, the south Westminster centre and walk-in facilities at St. Charles hospital, Kensington. Plans are being developed to establish further units at St. Bartholomew's Smithfield site and also for Lambeth, Greenwich, Bethnal Green and Hackney.

London Ambulance Service

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for the London ambulance service's record in reaching patients charter targets for response times.

Mr. Sackville: The latest published figures are for January 1994 and are as follows:

	Per cent.
14-minute response standard	65
8-minute response time	12
3-minute activation time	34

This performance falls short of the patients charter targets. That is why in this financial year the Government and the London regions will invest an extra £14·8 million in the London ambulance service, tied to specific improvements in performance.

Health Workers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health service workers have been made redundant in London since the Tomlinson report was published.

Dr. Mawhinney: Separate figures for inner London have been held centrally only since April 1993. Between April and December 1993 around 750 redundancies were reported by inner London hospitals.

Health Information

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have called (a) the health information service and (b) the health literature line.

Dr. Mawhinney: A special trawl of the national health service regions shows that the number of calls received by the health information service in the period between April 1992 and March 1994 was 234,656.

The number of calls received by the health literature line in the period between April 1993 to March 1994 was 223,346.

WALES

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 22 February, Official Report, column 144, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

School Buildings

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representation he has received from teachers' and head teachers' organisations regarding the condition of school buildings; and if he will meet the president of the National Association of Head Teachers in Wales to discuss linkage between social deprivation and low educational achievement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I have from time to time received representations on the condition of school buildings from teachers and head teachers organisations; responsibility for the repair and maintenance of school buildings rests with the local education authority. Any request from the president of the National Association of Headteachers in Wales for a meeting to discuss linkage between social deprivation and educational achievement will be carefully considered.

Buckley, Local Facilities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will visit Bistre community centre, Buckley, Clwyd; and if he will meet the voluntary bodies who use the centre;

(2) if he will convene a meeting with Clwyd county council and Buckley town council to review local facilities and voluntary groups in Buckley; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will meet Buckley town council.

Mr. Redwood: I have no immediate plans to visit Bistre community centre or to meet Clwyd county council and Buckley town council to review local facilities and voluntary groups in Buckley.

Milk Surpluses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to allow dairy farmers in Wales who have exceeded their production quota to donate their surplus milk to third-world aid agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The European Commission has confirmed that, under the present EC regulations, using surplus milk for food aid purposes would count against producers' quota allocation. I have asked officials to review this matter in consultation with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Commission.

Water Drainage, Llandudno

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the customer services committee for Wales investigation into foul and surface water drainage systems in Llandudno has been completed; and if he will put a copy in the Library.

Mr. Redwood: The investigation by the Customer Service Committee for Wales of the flooding incident at Llandudno in June 1993 was primarily directed at the response of Dwr Cymru Cyf—Welsh Water—to the incident, in the light of a number of customer complaints received regarding possible compensation. Following investigation it was considered that none of the complaints could be upheld by the committee because the flooding resulted from very exceptional weather conditions. If the hon. Member requires a copy of Dwr Cymru's report on the incident as provided to the customer service committee, he should contact the company directly.

Bovine Tuberculosis, Gwent

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek a report into the relationship between the outbreak of tuberculosis on a Gwent dairy farm last summer and the presence of infected badgers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: An investigation into the possible causes of an outbreak of bovine tuberculosis on a Gwent dairy farm last year continues to be carried out by the state veterinary service. No definitive conclusions have been reached.

Dental Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account he has taken of the figures for children's dental decay in the 1992 annual report of the chief medical officer at the Welsh Office in considering revisions to Welsh health circular (89)28 on requirements for the community dental service; and if the circular is still in force.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh health circular (89)28 remains in force. It remains relevant to present needs and requirements and there are no plans to revise it.

TREASURY

Value Added Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 819, if he will list the amount of value added tax outstanding for each year since 1988, including 1993, as a percentage of total value added tax collected.

Sir John Cope: Information for the years 1988 to 1993 is shown in the table.

The amounts outstanding shown in the table are the absolute gross cumulative amounts of value added tax arrears at 31 March each year.

Year	VAT arrears at 31 March	Cumulative VAT arrears at 31 March as a percentage of net receipts for the year ended 31 March
1988	0·8	3·5
1989	0·9	3·2
1990	1·2	4·0
1991	1·5	4·7
1992	1·6	4·6
1993	1·6	4·2

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 819, if he will list the average daily arrears of value added tax for each year since 1986, including 1993, as a percentage of average daily collections of value added tax.

Sir John Cope: Information for the years 1986 to 1993 is shown in the table.

Year	Average daily arrears at 31 March	Net VAT collected in year ended 31 March	Net average daily collections	Average daily arrears as a percentage of net VAT collected in the year
	£ billion	£ billion	£ million
1986	1·4	19·3	53·0	7·0
1987	1·2	21·4	58·5	5·7
1988	1·0	24·1	65·9	4·4
1989	1·1	27·3	74·9	4·0
1990	1·2	29·5	80·8	4·0
1991	1·6	31·0	84·9	5·2
1992	1·9	35·6	97·6	5·4
1993	2·0	37·2	102·0	5·4

The average daily arrears figure represents the average gross amount of value added tax outstanding on any one day during the year. It cannot be directly related to an average daily collections figure, as the first is a measure of average total cumulative arrears outstanding on any day. The latter relates to average receipts on a single day, and is not a cumulative figure.

The percentages shown relate to the average daily arrears figure at the year end, expressed as a percentage of net VAT collected in the year.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many counter callers and telephone queries the Inland Revenue had in the period February to March in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Dorrell: The numbers of counter callers and telephone queries dealt with by tax offices in the periods concerned are set out in the table. Data are not available for the smaller number of specialist and collection offices.

	Counter callers	Telephone callers
Mid February to mid March 1992	388,273	1,980,322
Mid February to mid March 1993	342,917	2,079,299
Mid February to mid March 1994	352,043	2,354,400

The earlier timing of the Budget has allowed all the consequential adjustments to employee codings to be made at the start of the year. In the past there would have been a recoding exercise following the Budget in March, and queries would have arisen after that.

As in previous years, however, there has been a decrease in the aggregate number of counter and telephone callers in the reporting period to mid-March this year.

SCOTLAND

Tourism

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to strengthen the composition of the Scottish tourism co-ordinating group; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend announced on 29 June 1993 that, as part of the tourism review, the Scottish tourism co-ordinating group would be responsible, under my chairmanship, for supervising the preparation by the Scottish tourist board of a national tourism strategy for Scotland.

I have concluded that it will be desirable, if widespread commitment to the national tourism strategy is to be secured, to strengthen the group with a wider range of tourist interests. I am glad to announce that the following members have agreed to serve:

	Serving members
Scottish Tourist Board	Chairman and Chief Executive[1]
Scottish Enterprise	Chairman and Chief Executive[1]
Highlands and Islands Enterprise	Chairman and Chief Executive[1]
British Tourist Authority	Chief Executive[1]
COSLA	President
Scottish Confederation of Tourism	Chairman
Scottish Natural Heritage	Chairman
The Scottish Arts Council	Chairman
The Scottish Sports Council	Chairman
The Scottish Museums Council	Chairman
Historic Scotland	Director and Chief Executive
Scottish Office Industry Department	Head of Highlands, Tourism and Co-ordination Division[1]

[1] Existing members of the group.

The remit of the group will be to devise a national tourism strategy, to review that strategy annually, to ensure that it is implemented, to improve Scotland's tourism product, and to ensure effective co-ordination between Scottish tourist interests.

The first meeting of the expanded group will be on 20 May.

Aggravated Trespass

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in respect of the aggravated trespass clause in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill with regard to Scotland; and if he will place these submissions and his replies in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 March 1994]: My right hon. Friend has received representations to the effect that the provisions of the clause will be used to obstruct lawful outdoor activity in Scotland, such as hill walking. There has also been some support for the clause.

Replies to those who have expressed concern about the clause have made it clear that its purpose is to ensure that those engaging in lawful activities, whoever and whatever they may be, are provided with protection from trespassers who intend to intimidate them or otherwise intend to obstruct or disrupt those activities.

The material in question is a matter for my right hon. Friend and those who have submitted the representations. It would therefore be inappropriate for arrangements to be made for it to be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Jaguar XJS

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he was first made aware of the possibility that Ford was considering moving from the United Kingdom to Portugal the assembly of the next generation Jaguar XJS.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department was first informed in July 1993 that Ford was considering Portugal as a possible location for the manufacture of the Jaguar X100, which is the successor to the XJS sports car.

CRAFT Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which companies and technology centres are participating in the Co-operative Research Action for Technology programme for small and medium-sized enterprises under the framework programme for research and development; and what proportion of this programme has been spent in Great Britain.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not readily available in the form requested. Each CRAFT project must have participants from two or more Community countries and at the moment the United Kingdom accounts for 10 to 11 per cent. of the 640 participants in projects so far awarded grant; 15 United Kingdom-based organisations are engaged in research and development under the programme.

STRIDE Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects supported by the EU Science and Technology for Regional Innovation and Development in Europe programme.

Mr. Heseltine: A list of successful applicants under the STRIDE initiative has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Technology and Innovation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the list of the projects supported by (a) the advanced technology programme and (b) the support for innovation programme since the inception of the projects.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Steel Industry

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent decision by the European Commission to delay the restructuring of the steel industry.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 April 1994]: I know of no such decision. Restructuring of the EC steel industry is essentially a matter for the companies concerned. The most important contribution which the Commission can make lies in the rigorous application of the European Coal and Steel Community state aid rules, including in particular implementation of the improved monitoring procedures agreed at the 17 December Industry Council.

Post Offices

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices and sub-post offices there are; what were the figures 20 years ago; what is their estimated profit in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 April 1994]: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of branch post offices and sub-post offices were as follows:

Number of offices	February 1994	March 1974
Branch offices	850	1,607
Sub-post offices	18,968	22,276

In 1992-93, Post Office Counters Ltd., which is the subsidiary of the Post Office responsible for post offices, made a profit on ordinary activities before taxation of £24·9 million. In 1973-74, the Post Office was a very different organisation, covering telecommunications and Girobank services, as well as the constituent parts of the existing business. The accounts were not structured in a way which allows the profitability of what is now Post Office Counters Ltd. to be distinguished from other parts of the operation.

Metal Recycling

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek the assessment of the British Bankers Association of the effect on the credit-worthiness and asset base of the metal recycling industry of waste management licensing.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Under the Government's deregulation initiative there is a requirement for compliance costs to be assessed prior to the implementation of any new regulations, with special account taken of the impact on small businesses. In doing this the Government do, of course, take account of any views put forward by industry. I understand, however, that the British Bankers Association has not, as yet, produced an assessment of the possible effect of waste management licensing on asset bases. If and when it does so, the Government would be interested to receive a copy.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Powers

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the functions of local authorities which provide them with a power or right of entry, search or seizure into or of any property.

Mr. Gummer: There is a large number of such powers, including those listed in the table:

Acts of Parliament

- Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 (c.65)
- Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 (c.38)
- Public Health Act 1961 (c.64)
- Building Act 1984 (c.97)

- The Cattle Plague Order 1928 (SR & O 1928 No. 206)
- The Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations 1976/1209
- The Rabies (Control) Order 1974/2212

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what computer systems his Department has brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Gummer: The information is set out in the table. All systems are still in use.

Year, System and Function	Cost £ million
1990-91
Administration of European Regional Development Fund grants.	0·3
1990-91
Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution (HMIP) Corporate Information system—to support the regulatory and office administration functions of HMIP.	1·3

Limehouse Tunnel Road Link

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer concerning the Limehouse tunnel road link on 23 March, Official Report, columns 277-78, what were the reasons for the demolition of 164 units of the St. Vincent estate not related to construction of the tunnel, stating the number of units related to each purpose; what is the approximate breakdown of the £45 million costs of rehousing 314 households and the cost of demolition of the 256 dwellings demolished; and what is the approximate percentage and acreage of the area now used for (a) tunnel purposes, (b) other current purposes and (c) future residential, commercial, or retail and other uses.

Mr. Baldry: The reasons for the demolition of the 164 units not directly related to the construction of the Limehouse link, were as follows:

26 dwellings (St. Christopher House) received Dangerous Structure Notices served during construction.

28 dwellings (Jamaica House) were demolished for the new bus only diversion/Limehouse Causeway junction improvement.

110 dwellings (Cayman, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, Nevis and Bermuda Houses) were unsuitable in terms of design, condition and location for refurbishment as family accommodation.

The breakdown of the £45 million cost of rehousing the 314 households at the St. Vincent estate is as follows:

	£ million
Rehoused with housing associations in the borough	29·8
Rehoused in existing borough stock	6·5
Assisted to buy own property	1·9
Moved to out of borough housing association stock	4·4
Other (disturbance/administrative/security	2·3
Demolition costs (164 units)	0·24
Total	45·14

Note: The demolition costs of the remaining 92 units form part of the overall tunnel construction costs and are not available separately.

The approximate percentages and acreage of the areas used for the following purposes are:

	Acres	Percentage
(a) Tunnel purposes:
Limehouse Link works	1·11	22
(b) Other current purposes:
Bus diversion/junction improvements	0·13	57
(c) Future residential/commercial/ retail and other uses:
Youth club	0·43	8
Residential/open space/ commercial	2·72	54
Site roads	0·63
Total	5·02

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the leak of acid at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield on 29 March; what investigations have been undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and what risk was posed to the Sellafield work force from the accident.

Mr. Atkins: The spillage of nitric acid, a standard industrial chemical, occurred in a room housing tanks supplying chemical reagents for use in THORP operations.

The operator informed Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about the spillage and initiated an investigation into its cause. The HMIP site inspector attended the plant on the same day and was briefed about the circumstances and the precautionary actions taken. HMIP is awaiting the results of the operator's investigation before deciding if any further action needs to be taken.

The Health and Safety Executive is also investigating the incident and will include an assessment of any potential risk to Sellafield employees.

Housing Investment

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the housing investment programme allocation for each local authority in each year since 1978-79.

Sir George Young: Information on housing investment programme allocations since 1978-79 for each local authority in England is available in the Library of the House.

Rent Registration Service

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum of rents referred to the rent registration service for the last year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young [holding answer 12 April 1994]: In 1992-93 about 275,000 fair rent cases were referred to the rent officer service, amounting to a total rental value of some £566 million.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many right hon. and hon. Members of the House of Commons and the House of Lords have visited Hong Kong at the invitation of the Governor of Hong Kong during the current Parliament.

Mr. Goodlad: Sixty-five, 53 of whom are right hon. and hon. Members of the House of Commons and 12 of whom are Members of the House of Lords.

Malaysia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Malaysia concerning the implications for human rights of the banning in Malaysia of the film "Schindler's List"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Malaysian Government lifted its ban on the film "Schindler's List" on 30 March in accordance with normal guidelines governing the screening of all local and foreign films.

Indonesia (Arms Sales)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on the sale of arms to Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: Our policy on arms sales to Indonesia is based on the principle that all sovereign states enjoy the right, under article 51 of the United Nations charter, to defend themselves. This is a right we claim for ourselves and it would be inconsistent and discriminatory to deny it to others. All applications for export licences are, none the less, subject to strict controls and scrutinised on a case-by-case basis. For example, if we believe a prospective purchase is likely to be used for repressive purposes against a civilian population, the application is rejected.

Antarctica

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what prosecutions have taken place in United Kingdom courts in respect of offences committed in Antarctica, under section 5 of the Antarctic Treaty Act 1967.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There have been no prosecutions under section 5 of the Antarctic Treaty Act 1967 since it entered into force.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations Operation in Somalia —UNOSOM—about the need to support efforts to maintain peace in Somaliland; and what response he has had.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In our regular contacts with the United Nations we have strongly supported efforts aimed at bringing peace and stability to all regions of Somalia. UNOSOM's mandate is to assist the Somalis in their efforts in seeking a peaceful solution to the tragic civil war. UNOSOM has given practical and financial assistance to these efforts.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about further disarmament in Somaliland; and what action the United Kingdom Government are taking to support this.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There have been no confirmed reports of further voluntary disarmament in north west Somalia. The demobilisation proposal currently being prepared by the local authorities in Northwest Somalia with assistance from the United Nations development programme includes provisions for disarmament. The recent declaration in Nairobi agreed by the 15 factions called for the implementation of voluntary disarmament in Somalia. We fully support this declaration.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what fighting is currently occurring in Liberia; who are the participants; and how this is affecting the peace process.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that the Liberian Peace Council has been fighting against National Patriotic Front of Liberia forces in the south-east of the country. In March there were reports of fighting between the Lofa Defence Force and the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy in the north-east. None the less the three signatory parties to the Cotonou agreement appear to be continuing their efforts to implement the agreement.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the UN has asked ECOMOG—the Economic Community of West African States military observer group—to intervene to stop the current warfare in Liberia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Economic Community of West African States sent its military observer group to Liberia in 1990, for precisely this purpose. The UN military observer mission and ECOMOG are working to implement the Cotonou agreement and bring about an end to conflict in Liberia. The UN is not, however, in a position to give any specific direction to ECOMOG.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests have been made by the Government of Burundi for an international intervention force because of the security situation in the country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following the assassination of President Ndadaye in October 1993, the Burundi authorities requested the intervention of an international force. This led to the establishment of the Organisation of African Unity observer mission which has now begun to arrive in Burundi. As far as we are aware no further requests have been made since the tragic death of President Ntyaramira on 6 April.

TRANSPORT

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what computer systems his Department has brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Norris: The tables provide details of the main systems brought in over the last three years.

In addition, smaller systems based on personal computers and small networks have been introduced to support a very wide range of administrative functions such as asset management, project management/costing, management information, text processing.

Business Area and System name/function	Year	Whole system cost (£x000)	Still in use? Yes/No

10. Upgrades. Upgrades to existing systems.	1993	345·0	Yes
11. Provision of Local Area Networks in six locations to provide Office Systems.	1993-94	570·0	Yes
Office of Privatisation and Rail Franchising
1. Local Area Networks including Mail Gateway links to outside companies.	1993-94	124·1	Yes

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information technology consultants his Department has employed in each of the last five years; for what purpose; and at what total cost.

Mr. Norris: Since January 1992, the Department of Transport and its agencies have awarded commissions to 62 information technology consultancy companies. The tasks involved range from strategic analysis to system review and system maintenance. The cost of the commissions in this period is about £10 million. Earlier information is not readily available.

Canning Town Flyover

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made as to whether traffic flows by the alternative lower Lea crossing would be adequate to deal with current and future demands on the Canning Town four-lane flyover;

(2) how the proposed works in respect of the scheme to widen the Canning Town flyover from four lanes to six will reduce existing congestion and delay;

(3) when he expects the Canning Town flyover with (a) two and (b) three lanes in each direction will produce significant delays to traffic; and over what periods of the day.

Mr. Norris: The questions relate to operational matters of the Highways Agency and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 14 April 1994:

Steven Norris, the Minister for Transport in London has asked me to write to you about the three questions on the proposed improvement of the A13 from Ironbridge to Canning Town which you tabled for answer in the House by the Secretary of State for Transport.

You asked when delays could be expected and how the proposed trunk road improvements would reduce existing congestion and delay. With the present four lanes, delays are expected to be significant for westbound traffic in the morning peak period from the year 2000 onwards. With the capacity increased to six lanes, three in each direction, the proposed improved capacity at the Canning Town flyover would match that of the A13 elsewhere and would remove the present constriction on the flow of traffic. Therefore, no significant delays would be expected at this location in the foreseeable future.

You also asked whether the capacity of the alternative Lower Lea Crossing would be adequate to deal with the current and future demands on the Canning Town four lane flyover. The purpose of the lower crossing was to accommodate traffic between the development areas of the Royal Docks and the Isle of Dogs. Once these areas are fully developed there would be very little, if any, reserve capacity for use by trunk road traffic as an alternative route.

I believe this is the information you want, but please let me know if there is anything further you require.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the salaries and principal conditions from 1 April of (a) the chairman of British Rail, (b) the chairman of Railtrack, (c) the Rail Regulator and (d) the Franchising Director.

Mr. Freeman: The salaries and principal conditions are in the table. Salaries are at 1993-94 rates, to be reviewed with effect from 1 April 1994.

Name	Salary £	Time commitment and expiry of appointment
(a) Sir Bob Reid	131,663	Three days per week —31 March 1995
(b) Robert B. Horton	121,800	Three days per week —31 March 1997
(c) John Swift, QC	125,000	Full time—30 November 1998
(d) Roger Salmon	100,000	Four days per week —7 November 1998

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Government intend to privatise Railtrack within the next three years.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's aim is to transfer all parts of the railway, including Railtrack, to the private sector. Railtrack has been established as a Government-owned company which will adopt the commercial approach expected of successful private sector businesses. This will facilitate its privatisation, although it is too soon to say when that will be.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will be consulting the British Rail pension trustees and other interested parties on the Government's detailed proposals for railway pensions after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Drafts of the initial pensions orders, the proposed trust deed and rules of the joint railway industry pension scheme, and associated documents were sent to the trustees and other interested parties on 31 March. Comments are requested by 25 April. Copies of these documents have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Railway Employees (Substance Abuse)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many employees in (a) London Underground and (b) British Rail have been (i) tested for drugs or alcohol, (ii) failed such a test, (iii) been prosecuted following such a test and (iv) been convicted following prosecution under the Transport and Works Act 1992.

Mr. Freeman: During the period 7 December 1992 to 28 February 1994 the British Transport police acting under the Transport and Works Act 1992, carried out the following tests:

	London Underground	British Rail
Total number of tests administered	57	181
Total number of positive tests	12	33
Total number of tests refused or failed	8	7
Total number of prosecutions in progress or completed	16	30
Total number of convictions to 28 February 1994[1]	1	15

[1] These figures relate to convictions currently registered on the BTP force computer system.

Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to provide signing to the Isle of Wight;

(2) if he will provide signing to the Isle of Wight from the M27.

Mr. Key: After careful consideration I have asked the Highways Agency to provide a sign on the eastbound approach to the M27 junction 3 and one on the westbound approach to M27 junction 12. These will sign the Isle of Wight as a major destination and provide travellers with clear directions.

EDUCATION

Books and Equipment

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent by each local education authority outside London on books and equipment in 1992-93 prices in (a) 1979-80 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table.

General National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to divide provision of various levels of general national vocational qualifications between the further and higher education sectors.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: General national vocational qualifications are currently available up to advanced level—broadly equivalent to GCE advanced level—and are not therefore regarded as higher education. Higher education institutions are, however, free to offer them and to seek funding from the Further Education Funding Council. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications proposes shortly, at the request of the Government to consult on the possibility of introducing GNVQs at levels above advanced level.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it is his intention that general national vocational qualifications at all levels shall be available in each travel-to-work area via the further education sector.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The Government intend that all 16-year-olds should have the option of studying for GNVQs—at foundation, intermediate or advanced level—in their locality. More than 80,000 students in over 1,400 schools and colleges are already taking GNVQ courses. We intend that the number should continue to increase rapidly, consistent with securing quality and rigour.

Further Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will bring forward proposals to allow students aged 16 to 18 years to be able to attend a further education college of their choice without incurring financial penalties from their local authority.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: It is a condition of grant to the Further Education Funding Council that colleges in the further education sector should not charge tuition fees to home and EC full-time students aged 16-18. Assistance with the costs of part-time study, and with other expenses, is a matter for local education authorities, which are free to decide their own discretionary awards policies in the light of local needs and circumstances, their priorities and the resources available to them.

Temporary Employment

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the reasons for ceasing to list separately those going into temporary employment in table 16 of his latest departmental report Cm 2510 regarding destinations of full-time and sandwich graduates on first degree courses.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The information on graduates in temporary or short-term employment, subsumed within table 16 of the departmental report Cm 2510 for reasons of simplicity and brevity, is shown in the table.

[1] Destination in the December following graduation. Excludes Open university students.
[2] Students reporting entering employment which will last for three months or less and due to end during the first three months of the calendar year following graduation.
[3] Home students.
[4] Includes teacher training.
[5] Includes not available because of having a fixed offer or acceptance of a place on another course, involved in portfolio preparation, taking time out, pregnancy/maternity/paternity, age past retirement, health and death.
Sources: DFE survey exam results and first destination Universities' statistical record.

Comparable data for graduates from Great Britain institutions were published in March 1993 in tables 4 to 7 of Statistical Bulletin 7/93, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, and figures for those graduating in academic year 1991-92 consistent with table 16 will be available shortly.

The destination surveys conducted by the "Universities Statistical Record" and the Department are intended to collect the first destination of graduates at or around the end of the calendar year in which they graduate. In many cases those graduates reporting their first destination as short-term employment continue in employment at the end of that period.

Higher Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the numbers and percentages of students in higher education undertaking two-year diploma courses and three and four-year first degree courses in each of past 10 years.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The information requested for the academic years 1988-89 to 1992-93 is shown in the table. I shall write to the hon. Member when the information for the earlier years has been collated.

Full-time and sandwich higher education students in England enrolled on two year diploma and three and four year first degree courses 1988-89 to 1992-93

Two-year diplomas	20·6	(12)	21·2	(11)	25·0	(11)	30·0	(12)	36·1	(12)
Three-year degrees	82·8	(48)	93·1	(48)	104·2	(48)	120·6	(47)	141·9	(48)
Four-year degrees	38·6	(22)	46·1	(24)	51·6	(24)	61·7	(24)	70·2	(24)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of full-time undergraduates in English higher education institutions are on four-year courses.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: In the academic year 1992-93, 24 per cent. of all full-time undergraduates, including sandwich students, in English higher education institutions were enrolled on four-year courses.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the numbers of students per academic member of staff in higher education in the latest six years for which he has information, stating any assumptions made in providing the information.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Information for the most recently available five years is given in the table. Comparable data for the sixth year is not immediately available and will take some time to collate. I will write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy in the Library.

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Universities (Great Britain)	10·3	10·7	11·3	11·9	13·3
PCFC institutions	—	—	—	15·3	17·1
LEA institutions[1]	12·0	11·3	11·8	8·2	9·1

[1] Includes institutions that transferred to the PCFC in 1989 for all years up to and including 1989-90.
Sources: DFE surveys Further Education Student Record, Form 618G and Annual Monitoring Survey, Universities' Statistical Record, PCFC surveys PARISS and Staff Record.

Assumptions made in the calculations include:

(i) one full-time equivalent represents one full-time student or member of staff;
(ii) part-time students and members of staff have been converted pro-rata to full-time equivalents;
(iii) university staff with some teaching coimmitment are included, whatever their source of funding and;
(iv) universities are on a Great Britain basis, other institutions on an England only basis.

Student Grants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the cost of restoring student grants to their 1989 levels in real terms, assuming current student numbers in higher education were maintained; and what percentage rise this represents.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimate. To do so would require, in addition to assuming current student numbers, further assumptions about changes in his current policy on student support.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has regarding local authorities which have ceased to offer any discretionary awards to students in further education.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The latest returns by local education authorities to the Department indicate that in 1992-93 the following six authorities made no further education discretionary awards: Haringey, Harrow, Isles of Scilly, Newham, Sunderland, Westminster. Six authorities have yet to make returns on their discretionary awards expenditure. The recently published Gulbenkian report stated that nine LEAs, not named in the report, planned to make no new discretionary awards in 1993-94.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has regarding local authorities refusing to consider granting discretionary awards to students in further education due to the college's being located outside the local authority area where the student lives.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 15 April 1994]: Local education authorities are free to decide their own discretionary awards policies in the light of local needs and circumstances, their priorities, and the resources available to them. My right hon. Friend has no power to intervene and does not seek information on their policies on a regular basis.

Business and Technician Education Council Courses

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of staff teaching BTEC courses in (a) secondary schools and (b) further education colleges are known to have industrial experience.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: This information is not collected centrally.

Further and Higher Education Statistics

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what procedures exist for secondary schools catering for 11 to 16-year-olds to be systematically informed of the performance of former pupils in entering further and higher education; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the desirability for parents of this information being made available when they are considering the choice of a secondary school.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 12 April 1994]: There are no procedures for secondary schools to be informed of the performance of former pupils in further and higher education. However, all colleges in the further education sector are required to provide local secondary schools with a breakdown of their results.

GCSE Examinations

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has on the proportion of year 11 pupils in secondary schools who are not entered for any GCSE examinations; and what information he has available to distinguish between (a) small and large schools, (b) urban and rural schools, (c) schools in deprived and affluent areas and (d) schools with low, average and high unit costs.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The proportion of pupils aged 15 in maintained schools excluding special schools in England at the beginning of the 1992-93 academic year who were not entered for any GCSE examination by the summer of 1993 is estimated to be 3·9 per cent. Information by size of 15-year-old age group in school is given in the table. Analyses by population density, by type of area or by unit costs are not readily available.

15-year-old pupils in maintained schools 1992-93

	Number not attempting any GCSE	Total number of 15-year-old pupils	Percentage not attempting any GCSE	Number of schools
Less than 60 pupils	164	4,386	3·7	96
60-89	1,244	25,375	4·9	330
90-119	3,303	75,273	4·4	714
120-159	3,542	88,396	4·0	654
150-179	3,981	104,042	3·8	633
180-209	2,640	73,477	3·6	381
210-239	1,425	43,677	3·3	195
240 and over	1,867	52,550	3·6	187
Total	18,166	467,176	3·9	3,190

Accredited Engineering Degree

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the higher education institutions which will be offering the accredited engineering degree in 1994-95 for which students will qualify for the £500 bursary.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Most United Kingdom higher education institutions offer accredited engineering degree courses. I will obtain and send to the hon. Member a copy of the latest Engineering Council list of accredited engineering degrees. Every United Kingdom student with AAB at A-level or its equivalent starting one of these degrees in autumn 1994 will be eligible for the bursary.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cars

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cars were purchased by her Department in each of the last five years; and how many of those were of British manufacture.

Mr. Jack: The numbers of vehicles, including cars, purchased by my Department are as follows:

Year	Number
1989	86
1990	81
1991	74
1992	43
1993	65

The policy is for the Department to buy the models necessary for the purpose intended where this provides the most cost-effective option. All purchases are made through central call-off contracts set up for that purpose.

There are no centrally kept records according to manufacturer.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will authorise further investigation into the severity of the bovine immunodeficiency virus in cows at the Blything farm in Kelsall; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Veterinary officials from this Department have already put considerable efforts into detailed investigations at the farm in Kelsall where cattle with serological evidence of exposure to bovine immunodeficiency-like virus have been identified. We are continuing with these investigations.

Dairy Surpluses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make it her policy to allow dairy farmers who have exceeded their production quota to donate their surplus milk to third-world aid agencies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The European Commission has confirmed that under the present EC regulations, using surplus milk for food aid purposes would have to count against producers' quota allocations. I have, however, asked officials to review the matter in consultation with the Commission.

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what computer systems his Department has brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information technology consultants his Department has employed, for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Social Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what ESF funding is allocated to support youth training and training-for-work schemes; and what percentage of the cost of these schemes, or their forerunners, has been met by the European social fund in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money his Department has received from the European social fund in each year since 1990; and to what that money has been allocated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Figures for money from the European social fund handled by the Department over the years in question are as follows:

	£ million
1990	296·18
1991	367·75
1992	377·57
1993	624·01

The figures for 1990, 1991 and 1992 relate to final amounts paid to applicant bodies, whereas figures for 1993 relate to amounts originally approved, since final claims for the programmes in question have not yet been submitted. Figures for Community initiatives between 1991 and 1993 are included in the 1993 figures.

Over the period, the ESF has supported a wide range of vocational training schemes and employment measures run by a variety of bodies, including voluntary organisations, further and higher education colleges, Government Departments, local authorities, training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies and industry training organisations.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent changes there have been in the policy of the European Community Commission towards the provision of money for the United Kingdom under objective 3 of the social fund for training for the unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In July last year the regulations governing the EC structural funds, including the European social fund, were revised. As a result, help for the long-term unemployed and young people are combined under objective 3, together with new priorities for others at risk of permanent exclusion from the labour market and promotion of equal opportunities for men and women.

The Government submitted to the European Commission in early November 1993 a plan for objective 3 spending in Great Britain over the period 1994-99; a copy of this has been placed in the Library. We await a decision from the Commission on the plan.

Departmental Office Space, Ipswich

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many square feet of office space his Department leases, rents or owns inside the boundary of the borough of Ipswich; and what was the equivalent area in June 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total area of office space leased, rented or owned by the Employment Department group is 32,175 sq ft.

The equivalent figure for June 1979 was 29,367 sq ft.

Unemployment Measures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider introducing a spectrum of unemployment measures similar to the U1-U7 classifications adopted by the United States Bureau of Labour Statistics; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information required to compile the U1-U7 measures is available from the labour force survey database which is publicly released each quarter. Any United Kingdom decision to publish such measures in their own right will be taken only in consultation with the relevant international organisations, and following consideration of the recent decision by the United States Bureau of Labour Statistics to suspend publication of all but one of these measures pending their review.

Working Hours

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the total number of hours worked in the economy for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 31 March 1994 at column 928.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the objectives of the research commissioned by his Department from KPMG Peat Marwick regarding training and enterprise councils; what were the conclusions of that report; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Miss Widdecombe: KPMG Peat Marwick was commissioned in June 1992 to explore the advantages, disadvantages and practical implications of moving to a higher level of output-related payments to training and enterprise councils for youth training and employment training.

The consultants concluded that it was not feasible to move entirely to output-related payments without major changes to the systems when operating.

New funding arrangements for YT and training for work are now being tested in a smaller number of TECs in England.

A copy of the report from KPMG will be placed in the Library.

Youth Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure by his Department on youth training in each of the last four years; and what is the expected outturn for 1994-95 in cash terms and in 1993-94 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table. With fewer people in the age group concerned and more staying on in full-time education, we are now spending more per head on youth training than previously.

Actual expenditure 1990-91 to 1993-94 and expected outturn for 1994-95

	£ million
1990-91	823·4
1991-92	746·3
1992-93	617·0
1993-94	640·2
1994-95	[1]676·5
1994-95	[2]650·5

[1] At cash prices.
[2] At 1993-94 prices.

Notes:
1989-90 relates to youth training scheme.
1990-91 onwards relates to youth training and credits.
Figures for 1990-91 are for Great Britain.
Figures for 1991-92 are for England and Wales.
Figures for all other years are for England only.
Figures for 1993-94 are provisional.
Planned provision for 1994-95.

Training Expenditure

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure by his Department for employment training and employment action and then training for work in each of the last four years; and what is the expected outturn for 1994-95 in cash terms and 1993-94 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is as follows:

Actual expenditure 1990-91 to 1993-94 and expected outturn for 1994-95

£ million	Employment training	Employment action	Training for work	Total
1990-91	1,072·4	—	—	1,072·4
1991-92	737·4	16·3	—	753·7
1992-93	629·5	137·3	—	766·8
1993-94	—	—	709·9	709·9
1994-95	—	—	—	—
Cash	—	—	693·3	693·3
Real terms	—	—	666·7	666·7

Notes:
1. Excludes administration/running costs.
2. Figures for 1990-91 are for Great Britain.
3. Figures for 1991-92 are for England and Wales.
4. Figures for all other years are for England only.
5. Figures for 1993-94 are provisional.

Training for work and its predecessors are one of a range of options open to unemployed people. The Employment Department group offered a record total of 1·5 million opportunities in 1993-94 to help unemployed people back into work.

European Structural Fund

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether Her Majesty's Government are submitting proposals for European Community structural fund money under both objective 3 to assist those out of work and objective 4 to assist those who know they will lose their present jobs in the future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) on 25 January 1994 at column 223.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's estimate of the effects on the monthly claimant count of (a) the switch from sickness and invalidity benefits to an incapacity benefit in April 1995 and (b) the switch from unemployment benefit and income support to a job seeker's allowance in April 1996.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: [holding answer 14 April 1994]: The introduction of the new incapacity benefit is expected to increase the basic count progressively in 1995-96, 1996-97 and 1997-98. It is too early to quantify this effect reliably but preliminary estimates, based on the Department of Social Security's published assumptions on the numbers of people who will be found capable of work under the new arrangements for incapacity benefit, suggest that it could reach 200,000 by 1997-98.

The introduction of job seekers' allowance in April 1996 is likely to have a small downward effect on the count. Again, it is too early to give a reliable assessment of numbers, but preliminary estimates suggest that the effect could be around 30,000.

Further study is needed to assess the feasibility of maintaining the consistent, seasonally adjusted monthly claimant count series.

Works Councils Directive

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of companies and employees in the United Kingdom who will be covered by the proposed European Union directive on works councils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 April 1994]: The proposed directive will not apply to any companies or employees in the United Kingdom. Research suggests that some 90 UK-owned companies have employees above the proposed threshold levels in the other 11 member states and will therefore be affected by a directive of the Eleven just as they are affected by the domestic law of those countries.

DEFENCE

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which years before 1990-91 contingent liabilities, whether statutory or non-statutory, in respect of International Military Services Ltd. appear in the Consolidated Fund accounts.

Mr. Aitken: Information on contingent liabilities in respect of International Military Services Ltd. prior to 1990-91 can be found in the Consolidated Fund accounts under the heading "Other Contingent Liabilities—Ordnance and Military Services Act 1984".

Iraq

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau, Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 25 March, Official Report, columns 471-72, what were the sources, scope and content of the information from which it was concluded Iraq could manufacture biological weapons.

Mr. Hanley: It is not our normal practice to comment on such matters.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special laundering and working facilities are available to the armed forces in the event of their being subject to chemical or biological weapons attack.

Mr. Hanley: In addition to individual protection equipment for defence against nuclear, biological or chemical attack, the armed forces possess, and continue to develop, collective protection equipment. This is deployed to protect medical facilities, aircrew and headquarters, as well as providing rest and recuperation for service personnel in an environment free from agent contamination. Her Majesty's ships and most armoured fighting vehicles have integral filtration-based collective protection systems.

Contaminated clothing, including NBC protective clothing, is not intended to be laundered: it is either decontaminated by the wearer, or replaced.

Strategic and Sub-strategic Strikes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the difference between a strategic strike and a sub-strategic nuclear threat to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: Our assessment of the intent and nature of any such threat would depend on the particular circumstances at the time.

Mines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to reviewing the use of mines and its relationship to developments in international law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Protocol II of the UN weaponry convention contains strict rules governing the use of land mines. A review conference on the convention has been called for 1995, the main aim of which will be to consider strengthening protocol II. We intend to play a full part in the review conference and are already participating in the preparatory work leading up to it.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive a report on the recent loss and subsequent recovery of anti-personnel mines from Shoeburyness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: A committee of inquiry has been convened by the establishment to investigate the circumstances surrounding the loss of these mines. I expect to have a report shortly.

Ninety of these mines remain missing and are expected to be widely scattered by now. They pose minimal risk to the public as they are without their detonators. Trials have shown that they would not detonate if exposed to heat or pressure. The emergency services are well aware of the situation.

Ministerial Directions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 175, about advice of accounting officers, what additional costs will be incurred over the next three years as a result of his decision to close part only of RNSD Copenacre.

Mr. Hanley: The costs that will be incurred over the next three years as a result of the decision to close part only of RNSD Copenacre will be lower than those estimated under the full closure option.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 175, about advice of accounting officers, what will be the general effects on the size and shape of the United Kingdom's shipbuilding industry of his decision to award the order for the second auxiliary oiler replenishment vessel on a single tender basis.

Mr. Aitken: The contract for the second auxiliary oiler replenishment ship, RFA Fort George, was placed with Swan Hunter on 18 December 1987. The ship was accepted from that company in March 1993. It is not possible to estimate what general effects this decision had on the size and shape of the United Kingdom shipbuilding industry.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 174, what was the approximate date on which he decided to place an order for image intensifiers with English Electric Values; and what was the total value of the order, and the impact of his decision on (a) the operational capabilities of the armed forces and (b) the size and shape of the British defence industry.

Mr. Aitken: The decision to place an order for image intensifiers with English Electric Values was made in March 1992; the value of the order was less than £10 million. The decision had no impact on the operational capabilities of the armed forces and was essential in maintaining an United Kingdom source of specialised image intensifier tubes.

Cost Study Teams

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 337, if he will give the titles of the progress reports produced by the defence costs study teams he has seen to date.

Mr. Aitken: The reports received were either final or interim reports for studies listed in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 15 February at column 750.

Russia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning a breach of security at a Russian intercontinental ballistic missile site at Barnaul in the Russian Republic on 10 March.

Mr. Hanley: We are aware that there was a breakdown in discipline leading to a shooting incident at the Barnaul nuclear missile site in Siberia on 10 March. We do not believe that this incident posed any significant security risk to the installation, nor was there any likelihood of a nuclear incident resulting from the occurrence.

Performance Pay

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 173, regarding performance pay in the armed forces, what is the name of the management consultants appointed by the Air Force Pay Review Board; and when they are due to complete their work.

Mr. Hanley: The choice of consultants to assist the AFPRB is its consideration of performance pay, and the terms of their appointment, are entirely the responsibility of the AFPRB.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who are the members currently appointed to the Northern Ireland Consumer Committee for Electricity.

Mr. Tim Smith: Appointments to this committee are made by the Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member giving details of current membership.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 18 April 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Services Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has finalised his plans for the Court Services Agency; what consideration has been given therein to the current responsibilities of (a) tribunals, (b) social security commissioners, (c) Judge Advocate General's offices, (d) Official Solicitor, (e) Court Funds Office, (f) Lord Chancellor's visitors and (g) the Northern Ireland Court Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Plans for the creation of a Court Service Agency are yet to be finalised. Such plans will not, however, affect the responsibilities of those bodies and officeholders which the hon. Member has mentioned.

Minor Disputes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans his Department has to ensure that minor disputes can be resolved in court or at arbitration at less cost and greater speed than at present.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since the publication of the civil justice review in 1988, my Department has been engaged in an ongoing programme targeted at reducing cost, delay and complexity in all forms of civil litigation.

The small claims procedure in the county court aims to provide the benefits of arbitration to litigants with minor disputes. Various changes have been made to this procedure in recent years in order to increase its speed and accessibility. In 1993 106,000 cases were heard as arbitrations in the county court, more than twice as many as in 1990.

My Department has recently consulted on proposals that small unliquidated claims should also be heard in this more informal forum, and we are currently evaluting the results of this consultation.

Inns of Court School of Law (Admission Procedures)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to ask the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct to conduct an investigation into the admissions procedures for the Inns of Court school of law for the academic year 1994-95.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct is currently conducting a wide-ranging review into all aspects of legal education. It is due to complete this review at the end of 1995. The Lord Chancellor has no plans to request the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct to examine the specific procedures of the Inns of Court school of law in isolation.

Immovable Property Transactions Report

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 100, what response his Department made when approached in connection with the report to the European Commission on information and protection of transactions concerning immovable property purchased by consumers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I assume that the question refers to an answer given by the President of the Board of Trade on 12 April. The Lord Chancellor's Department was approached in the context of a study of the existing position in the United Kingdom. The Department offered to assist, but the offer was not followed up by those preparing the report.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parish Constables

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pilot projects have been undertaken using parish constables; and what resources his Department has contributed in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are 46 parish constable schemes in operation. They are listed in table A.

Parish constable schemes are the responsibility of chief officers and are funded in the same way as other policing activities. Additional resources allocated by the Home Department to police forces involved in the development of schemes for the supply of essential communications equipment are shown in table B.

Table A

There are 46 parish constable schemes in operation, of which 39 are parish special constable schemes and seven are parish warden schemes. Further details are given in the table.

Thirty nine parish special constable schemes were fully operational at 31 March 1994, including some arrangements which predated the launch of the initiative but which have now been adapted to fit the recommended criteria. The schemes are:

Cambridgeshire
- Bottisham

Derbyshire
- Chapel en le Frith
- Little Eaton
- Duffield
- Draycott
- Breaston
- Ironville
- Aldercar and Langley
- Chinley
- Hartshorn
- Overseal
- Hilton

Devon and Cornwall
- Lewannick

Dorset
- Winterbourne Strickland
- Yetminster

Durham
- Langley and Burnhope

Essex
- Hockley
- Southminster

Hampshire
Silchester
Tadley
Overton
Baughurst
Kingsclere
Bramley
Sherfield-on-Lodden

Kent
Capel, Tudeley, and Five Oak Green
Pembury
Frittenden
New parish special constable recruits are being trained within the communities to which they will eventually be dedicated in:
Goudhurst
Paddock Wood
Cranbrook
Hawkhurst

North Yorkshire
Sleights

Northumbria
Corbridge

Nottinghamshire
Kirkby
Beckingham

South Yorkshire
Hooton-Pagnall and Clayton
Thurcroft
Aston-cum-Aughton
Bramley and Ravenfield
Maltby

Suffolk
Elmswell

Warwickshire
Curdworth

PARISH WARDEN SCHEMES
Parish warden schemes fully operational at the end of March 1994 were:

Dorset
Schemes run and funded by the county council:
Broadwindsor
Stalbridge
Holt

Leicestershire
Scheme run and funded by the local parish council:
Glenfield—Five neighbourhood watch street wardens

West Mercia
(schemes which predate the launch of the parish constable initiative).

Schemes run and funded by the police:
Eardisley
Woobley
Pembridge

33 schemes were still in development at 31 March 1994, ie with ongoing negotiations with communities or recruitment drives for volunteers:
Bedfordshire—2, parish special constable
Cambridgeshire—1, parish special constable
Cleveland—4, parish special constable
Derbyshire—4, parish special constable
Leicestershire—1, parish special constable
Norfolk—5, parish special constable
Northamptonshire—1, parish special constable
Northumbria—1, parish special constable
Nottinghamshire—6, parish special constable
Staffordshire—3, parish warden
Surrey—5, parish special constable

Criminal Injury Compensation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Royal Ulster Constabulary Police Federation about proposals to alter the arrangements for criminal injury compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have not received any representations from the Police Federation for Northern Ireland. The new arrangements for awarding criminal injuries compensation in Great Britain came into effect on 1 April 1994. Separate arrangements continue to apply in Northern Ireland.

Unemployment and Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the results of the recent study on the link between unemployment and crime, conducted by the crime policy division of his Department;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the document on the link between unemployment and crime, prepared by the crime policy division of his Department.

Mr. Maclean: There is no such study or document.

Public Meetings and Demonstrations

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bans on public meetings and demonstrations were issued in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no power to ban public meetings. The power under the Public Order Acts of 1936 and 1986 to prohibit public processions was not used in 1979, and was used five times in 1985 and twice in 1993.

Emergency Services Equipment, Durham

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the revenue and capital expenditure of the Durham fire brigade on mobile communications equipment and command and control systems in each financial year since 1991-92; and what plans exist for 1994-95.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Expenditure on mobile communications equipment and command and control systems is a matter for individual authorities and detailed information is not held centrally.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the revenue and capital expenditure of the Durham police constabulary on mobile communications equipment and command and control systems in each financial year since 1991-92; and what plans exist for 1994-95.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Revenue and capital expenditure by Durham Constabulary on mobile communications equipment and command and control systems since 1991-92, and current plans for 1994-95, are shown in the table.

Revenue and capital expenditure by Durham Constabulary on mobile communications equipment and command and control systems

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95 (plans)
Revenue (£)	235,470	278,240	277,420	258,600
Capital (£)	5,000	36,100	105,000	181,000

Parliamentary Boundary Commission Inquiry, Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the results of the Essex parliamentary boundary commission inquiry to be published.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Boundary Commission for England will be making a decision on the inquiry report towards the end of June, after which the outcome will be published.

Aintree Spring Race Meeting

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs passed on to Aintree Racecourse Ltd. by Merseyside police for policing the 1994 Aintree spring race meeting.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Merseyside police estimate that the total charge to be passed on for this year's event will be about £100,000.

Cancer-inducing Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which drugs used to treat human patients are known to cause cancer in animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Many products used to treat human cancer and other life-threatening conditions are capable of causing cancer in animals; they are used because the benefits they offer to sufferers are judged to outweigh any risks there may be. The detailed information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Criminal Trials (Televising)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the televising of criminal trials in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: We have no such plans.

Radio Communications

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the estimated cost of replacing the radio communications equipment for the whole of the Metropolitan police district;

(2) if he will estimate the length of time that will be required by the Metropolitan police to plan, install and implement a trunked radio system.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that the Metropolitan police are evaluating tenders for the replacement of personal radio systems for divisional, specialist and public order use. The timescale for implementation will be a matter of negotiation prior to contract but the indications are that the work will take between four and five years to complete.

So long as the Metropolitan police are in negotiation with potential suppliers, details of cost estimates are commercially sensitive.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the dates for the implementation of the public safety radio communications project.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We plan that the public safety radio communications project, if approved, would be implemented from 1998. To that end, the Home Office is currently undertaking a detailed assessment of the feasibility and costs of various options. Implementation will depend on a number of factors including the availability of frequencies and technology.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EU Distance Selling Directive

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the European Union distance selling directive in relation to tourism.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have made it clear that it will not agree to this directive while it contains provisions which would prevent payment in advance for goods and services. We are also pressing for the complete exclusion of services with reservation from the scope of the directive. The Greek presidency has responded to these concerns by tabling compromise proposals which go some way to addressing them, and these are under discussion in Brussels. It is too early to say whether these proposals might form a basis for agreement.

GATT

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to publish a report on the expected benefits of the general agreement on tariffs and trade for British industry and commerce within each sector of the economy in the format of that produced in New Zealand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Government intend to publish a White Paper setting out the results of the GATT round. My Department is analysing the results of the round in order to identify more fully the potential opportunities for different industrial and commercial sectors.

Competitive Manufacturing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place the prospectus, guidance notes and application forms for his programme for competitive manufacturing in the Library.

Mr. Salmsbury: The recently published DTI annual report gives information on the many schemes operated by the department to help improve the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry. A copy of this report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what requests were received by the British Government from Iraqi companies or Government agencies for biological agents between 1979 and 1991; and if he will list the companies or Government agencies.

Mr. Needham: Records are not kept in a form which would enable me to answer this question. Export controls on certain specific biological agents were not introduced until 31 December 1992.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of (a) Ustilago nuda Rostrup, (b) Histoplasma capsulatum var. farciminosum, (c) Bacillus Anthracis, (d) Bacillus Subtilis Cohn, (e) Clostridium tetani, (f) Clostridium botulinum Type E, (g) Clostridium perfringens, (h) bacillus megaterium, (i) Clostridium botulinum Type A, (j) Brucella abortus Biotype 3, (k) Brucella abortus Biotype 9, (1) Brucella melitensis Biotype 1, (m) Brucella-melitensis Biotype 3, (n) Clostridium botulinum Type F, (o) Saccharomyces cerevesia, (p) Escherichia coli, (q) Bacillus cereus, (r) Staphylococcus epidermis, (s) Bacillus pumilus, (t) Cauliflower Mosaic Caulimovirus, (u) Plasmid in Agrobacterium Tumefaciens, (v) Bacillus ceres, (w) Francisella tularensis var. tularensis Olsufiev, (x) Salmonella choleraesuis subsp. choleraesuis Serptype typhi, (y) Klebsiella pneumoniae subsp. pneumoniae, (z) Hulambda 4x-8, clone (HPRT) chromosome, (aa) Hulambda 14-8, clone (HPRT) chromosome, (bb) Hulumbda 15, clone (HPRT) chromosome, (cc) PHPT31, clone (HPRT) chromosome and (dd) plambda 500, clone pseudogene (HPRT) chromosome were exported from Britain to Iraq between 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Needham: Records are not kept in a form which would enable me to answer this question. Export controls on certain specific biological agents were not introduced until 31 December 1992.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, columns 428-9, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested cannot be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information technology consultants his Department has employed; for what purpose; and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has employed a wide range of information technology consultants and contractors from many sources over the last five years, for the purposes of assisting the development of IT strategies, and all aspects of their implementation, including support for project management, project support, systems analysis, computer programming, system testing, and IT security. Expenditure on such resources for the last five years, for which information is held centrally, and excludes agencies, is as follows:

Year	£K
1989-90	2,015
1990-91	3,492
1991-92	5,072
1992-93	6,909
1993-94	5,247

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the present arrangement in the British Coal staff superannuation scheme of allowing staff to retire at 50 years of age will continue for present employees; whether the Government will continue to meet the cost from 50 years to 60 years; and on which vote the cost will be borne.

Mr. Eggar: The arrangements under which members of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme can qualify for pensions at 50 is a matter for the corporation and the scheme trustees. The related obligation on British Coal to make "additional contributions" in respect of early and enhanced pensions will continue to be honoured and to attract Government financial support. The cost to Government is borne on vote 5 within the Department's expenditure.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what computer systems his Department have brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has made increasing use of computer systems, enhanced existing systems, and introduced many new systems over the last five years to assist most aspects of my Department's work. This includes: financial and management information systems; database systems recording incidents of insolvency, patents, designs, trademarks, DTI sponsorship of United Kingdom companies, export licences, home accidents; econometric and statistical systems recording information on production sector companies, overseas trade, the insurance industry, energy sources and resources; modelling systems for pay forecasting and energy demands; and office automation and communications systems.

Micro-computer systems have a life expectancy of three years or more, and larger systems five years or more. Very few of the computer systems introduced over the last five years are no longer in use. Central capital expenditure on new and enhanced computer systems for the last five years is as follows:

Year	£k
1989-90	7,744
1990-91	8,496
1991-92	6,693
1992-93	9,308
1993-94	11,858

These figures exclude expenditure on behalf of agencies, except the Insolvency Service in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Immovable Property

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 100, what information he has concerning the date on which the European Commission intends to publish the report on information and protection of transactions concerning immovable property purchased by consumers; and what information he has as to why the Commission has not as yet published that report.

Mr. Heseltine: The Commission has no plans to publish the report now or in the future. It commissions many reports, not all of which are published. The Commission has not made public its reasons for not publishing this report.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 100, what response was given by the Office of Fair Trading to the approach made in connection with the report to the European Commission on information and protection of transactions concerning immovable property purchased by consumers.

Mr. Heseltine: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I have informed the director general of the question and I understand that he will be writing to the hon. Member.

Matrix Churchill Trial

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers in his Department were approached to sign public interest immunity certificates in connection with the Matrix Churchill trial and declined to do so.

Mr. Heseltine: On 29 September 1992, shortly before the Matrix Churchill trial, further DTI documents were discovered which fell within a class for which PII is usually claimed. In the absence of both myself and my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, Baroness Denton, was approached to sign a third DTI PII certificate in this case, following the two that I had signed earlier. She felt that the issue should await the Minister for Trade's return to the office the next day. On 30 September the Minister for Trade was approached to sign the certificate but was unable, in the time available to him, to give the matter the due attention that it demanded. The documents were subsequently mentioned to the court by prosecuting counsel and released to the defence in the light of the decision of the court to order the disclosure of other DTI documents.

Mobile Phones (GPs)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with representatives of the telecommunications industry to establish a subsidised phone rate for calls made to general practitioners' mobile phones when on call; and if he will make a statement on plans for such a rate.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 April 1994]: The use of mobile phones by general practitioners when on call can provide a valuable benefit to patients, by improving response times and quality of service. The price of phone services is a matter for the individual telecommunications companies who provide them. I have received no requests to discuss with these companies the subsidisation of their services.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all payments by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in relation to the Pergau project, giving the dates on which they were made and the amounts of the payments in each case; and if he will give similar information for the planned schedule of future disbursements.

Mr. Needham: Payments made by ECGD in relation to the Pergau project have been entirely related to the cost of providing interest rate support. Up to 20 December 1993 such costs amounted to £29·202 million of which the ODA ATP budget contributed £24·367 million.

Contributions are received from ODA in June and December in each year and, for ease of comparison, ECGD's costs, whether paid or accrued, have been reported to 20 December in the relevant financial year.

Future interest support costs will be affected by the rate at which the balance of the loan is drawn down and, to a limited extent, by the future course of interest rates. The table shows the estimated cost by financial year, including the contribution made from ODA ATP funds.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 650, what was the level of United Kingdom overseas investment in (a) the far east, (b) Europe and (c) north America in 1979 and 1993.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The available information for the nearest adjacent years for which estimates of overseas district investment have been made is as follows:

Direct investment assets abroad[1] (at book values)

		£ million
	1978[2]	1992
Far East (Asia, other than Middle East)	1,773	11,530
Western Europe	6,145	42,967
North America	6,496	61,130

[1] Investment in overseas branches, subsidiaries and associates of United Kingdom enterprises.

[2] Excludes insurance companies.

ENVIRONMENT

Tidal Movement, Torbay

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the level of tidal movements in Torbay; and if he will now categorise the bay as less sensitive under the urban waste water directive.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State asked the National Rivers Authority to make recommendations as to those areas which might be identified as high natural dispersion areas—less sensitive areas under the urban waste water treatment directive—in England and Wales. The authority has made its recommendations on the basis of agreed criteria and, in so doing, it has been for it to make whatever assessments of tidal movements may be relevant.

The Secretary of State will announce the areas to be identified as high natural dispersion areas shortly.

Cambridgeshire County Council

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was notified of the findings of the local government ombudsman in respect of Cambridgeshire county council concerning the case brought by Mr. E. B. C. Osmotherly; and what action he will take to ensure that the recommendations are implemented.

Mr. Baldry: Our attention has been drawn to this case on several occasions by the complainant's former and present Members of Parliament. I understand that the county council has declined to act upon the recommendations of the local government ombudsman, who is now in correspondence with the council about the terms of a statement which he will require to be published locally. My right hon. Friend has no powers to ensure that recommendations made by a local government ombudsman should be implemented.

Ofwat Regional Committees

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the previous water authority or company experience of each of the 1994 appointees to the regional customer services committees of Ofwat.

Mr. Atkins: The Water Industry Act 1991 requires the Director General of Water Services, in appointing persons to be members of customer service committees, to have regard to the desirability of the persons appointed being persons who have experience of, and have shown capacity in, some matter relevant to—(i) the function of a water or sewerage undertaker; or (ii) the carrying out of those functions in relation to any area by a company which the director has allocated, or is proposing to allocate, to that committee; and the desirability of—(i) the committee including one or more persons with experience of work among, and the special needs of, disabled persons; and (ii) persons appointed including disabled persons.

Copies of the Ofwat news releases announcing the new appointments made in 1994, including a short biography of the appointees, are in the Library.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current membership of each of the regional customer services committees of Ofwat, indicating which of those members were newly appointed in 1994.

Mr. Atkins: The chairmen and members of Ofwat's 10 customer service committees—CSCs—are listed in the director general's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library; the next report is expected to be published in June. I have today placed in the Library, a list of CSC members, excluding the chairmen, as at 31 March 1994. In 1994, so far, there has been one new appointment, that of Mr. Subhash Thakrar to Ofwat's Thames CSC. In addition, two new chairmen have been appointed in 1994, Mr. Eric Wilson to the Yorkshire CSC, and Dr. Roger Corbett to the Eastern CSC. Copies of the relevant Ofwat news releases relating to these appointments are also in the Library.

Council Tax

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what interim relief of council tax is available to households transferring to higher rated districts due to the implementation of local boundary commission recommendations.

Mr. Baldry: We shall be considering, together with the local authority associations, whether we should provide transitional help to protect countil tax payers where a new authority inherits commitments that otherwise could not be met without increasing council taxes.

Waste (Definition)

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to delay the implementation of waste management licensing of the metal recycling industry pending the agreement of a common European definition of waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the European Commission to issue a common European definition of waste.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 April 1994]: A common European definition of waste has been agreed and is contained in article 1 of directive 91/156/EEC which was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 18 March 1991. I announced on 13 April, Official Report, column 176, that the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994 had been laid before Parliament and will come into force on 1 May 1994. Implementation of the waste management licensing provisions of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will also commence on 1 May 1994. However, the application of these provisions to activities involving scrap metal will not commence until 1 October 1994. This will allow the scrap metal industry further time to consider the implications of the new system and to make any representations. The scrap metal industry will remain subject to the licensing provisions of part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 until 1 October 1994.

The 1994 regulations transpose into national legislation the definition of waste in article 1 of directive 91/156/EEC. The new definition will come into force on 1 May 1994 for the purposes of both part II of the 1990 Act and the extant provisions of part I of the 1974 Act.

Secure Training Places

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it will be possible for appeals to be made against planning decisions for the five new secure training centres being created by the Home Office if they are placed on the existing site of a disused Home Office detention centre.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 April 1994]: Development by the Crown does not at present require planning permission. But Government Departments follow the procedures contained in part IV of Department of the Environment circular 18/84 which provides for them to consult local planning authorities before proceeding with development, including material changes of use, which would otherwise require planning permission. Where the local planning authority objects to the development proposal or where there is any unresolved disagreement, the developing Department, if it wishes to proceed with the development, will notify the Secretary of State for the Environment, who will determine whether the development should go ahead. In all such cases the local planning authority, the developing Department, and other interested parties are given an opportunity to express their views. As with decisions on all planning applications, there is no third party right of appeal.

There may be cases where consultation would not be required, for example, because the development proposed does not entail a material change of use. In such cases, Departments have agreed to notify the local planning authority of development proposals which are likely to be of special concern to the authority or to the public. This gives the local planning authority an opportunity to decide whether to advertise it so as to give the public a chance to comment and to discuss with the developing Department ways in which the proposal might be amended to overcome any objections.

TREASURY

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when fines will be imposed on the United Kingdom under article 104c of the Maastricht treaty for being excessively in debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The possible imposition of fines on member states for failing consistently to comply with Council recommendations to tackle excessive deficits does not apply until the beginning of stage 3 of economic and monetary union. The protocol to the treaty relating to the United Kingdom makes it clear that this possibility can apply to the United Kingdom only if and when it enters stage 3. Under the European Communities (Amendment) Act 1993, the United Kingdom cannot move to stage 3 without approval by an Act of Parliament.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the extent to which the new reporting and collection system of the trade returns underestimates the balance of payments deficit; what are the reasons for this; and if he will issue a statement on the necessary provisions to the figures published since the new systems began.

Mr. Nelson: I have little to add to the replies I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 21 March at column 21, and for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 8 February at column 121.

The investigations into the Intrastat system are proceeding well. Customs and Excise and the Central Statistical Office aim to publish a full report in the summer at around the same time as data from the 1994 edition of the Pink Book on the United Kingdom balance of payments is released. As announced in its first release on the estimates of the balance of United Kingdom visible trade for January 1994, published on 14 April 1994, the Central Statistical Office aims to include any preliminary adjustments shown to be necessary with the estimates for trade in February 1994 that are scheduled for publication on 12 May 1994.

Savings (Income)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the bank rate in April 1988; what annual income was received from savings of £250; and what are the equivalent figures for April 1994.

Mr. Nelson: In April 1988, the base rate was 8 per cent. It now stands at 5¼ per cent. The annual income from savings depends on the financial product in which the savings are invested.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Psoriasis

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much is spent by the Medical Research Council on research into the treatment of psoriasis; what was the cost five years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the financial year 1992-93, the Medical Research Council's expenditure on research in the field of psoriasis was £409,000 and in the financial year 1988-89 total expenditure in this field amounted to £538,000.

The council also supports a substantial portfolio of research on skin, data from which may be of direct relevance to our understanding of diseases such as psoriasis. In the financial year 1992-93 the council's expenditure on skin research was £4,874,000.

The council is always willing to consider new applications for research in the area of psoriasis and other skin disorders; such proposals would be peer-reviewed in competition with all other applications for MRC support.

Press Releases

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will ensure that copies of Government press releases are always made available to hon. Members at the same time as they are placed in the Parliamentary Press Gallery.

Mr. Waldegrave: Most Government news releases which are placed in the Press Gallery are transmitted electronically at the time of release to POLIS—the House information system—where they may be accessed by any Member.

Access to Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the definition to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government of "vexatious" as used in paragraph 9 of the code of practice on access to Government information; what criteria will be used to judge whether or not a request for information is vexatious; and if he will give an explanation for the change in wording of paragraph 15(b) on statutory and other restrictions on information disclosure in regard to Parliament compared to paragraph xv of the draft code.

Mr. Waldegrave: "Vexatious" as used in the code of practice bears its natural and ordinary meaning. Whether or not a particular request is "vexatious" is a matter which needs to be established on a case-by-case basis. The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration would be able to investigate complaints that Departments had applied this or any other exemption unreasonably. On the final part of his question, I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 12 April at column 26.

PRIME MINISTER

Allivane

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what papers or communications are retained at 10 Downing street in regard to the role of Allivane in providing shells and other military equipment to Iraq and Iran.

The Prime Minister: Copies of correspondence received by my office since November 1990, and to which I or my office have replied, have been retained, as is customary. No records exist prior to April 1989.

Advisers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the name and Department of each special adviser employed in the service of himself, members of the Cabinet, Ministers of State, and Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State; if he will give their educational and vocational qualification, salaries and duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, columns 30-31, if he will identify those political advisers who are not employed on civil service grades of pay, the Departments in which they work and the salaries that they receive.

The Prime Minister: There are currently 38 special advisers attached to Ministers. Details of their names and Departments are as follows:

Name	Department
K. Adams	Environment
A. Allen	Trade and Industry
P. Barnes	Social Security
C. Blunt	Defence
T. Burke	Environment
J. Caine	Northern Ireland Office
D. Cameron	Home Office

H. Williams	Welsh Office
A. Young	Scottish Office

The duties of special advisers are a matter for the appointing Minister. Details of their qualifications are not held centrally.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 30 points, ranging from £19,121 to £59,957. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this. Of the 38 advisers currently employed, six are paid outside the normal salary spine—three political and three experts. One other, expert adviser, is paid on a civil service scale.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 31, if he will specify the salaries paid to political advisers in each Department since 1988, expressed in 1993-94 prices.

The Prime Minister: The salaries of individual advisers are confidential. Information available on the number of advisers in each department in each year since 1988 and the number of advisers on each point of the pay spine in each year since 1988 is in the tables. The salary figures shown against each point in the spine are those current since August 1992.

Belize

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to representations from the Government of Belize following the decision of the Greek presidency to eject Belize from observer status at the recent EC meeting in Athens with the San José Ten; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have protested to the presidency and made clear to others our dissatisfaction at the mishandling of arrangements regarding Belizean attendance at the San José meeting. We shall continue to make clear, both to partners and in the region, that Belize as a stable, responsible democracy deserves inclusion in the San José process.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

The Prime Minister: I have answered more than 2,000 questions, of which under 2 per cent. from a number of different hon. Members have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally. As computer and operational systems continue to improve, doubtless there will be increased potential for this percentage to decline.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library all correspondence between the Cabinet Secretary and Lord Justice Scott further to his letter of 17 March 1993.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Secretary has not had further correspondence with Lord Justice Scott concerning the issues raised in the former's letter of 17 March 1993.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Prime Minister whether all papers promised by Ministers or departmental officials to the Scott inquiry, pursuant to oral evidence by Ministers or officials have now been delivered to Lord Justice Scott.

The Prime Minister: Following recent hearings certain material remains to be provided to Lord Justice Scott, but will be sent as soon as possible. Further hearings will take place in May and the provision of material to Lord Justice Scott will continue for some time.

European Union (Qualified Majority Voting)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant his oral statement of 29 March, Official Report, columns 797-99 if he will state the treaty or other basis on which the Court of Justice of the European Community would be able to rule that, assuming accession to the Community of all applicant states—any decision reached by at least 68 votes—the Commission would be required to take any necessary initiatives stating the date and place when the document giving the basis for such a ruling was agreed.

The Prime Minister: The obligation, in the Council decision on qualified majority voting, on the Commission and the presidency to take any initiative necessary to reach a solution adopted by at least 68 votes is justifiable in the European Court of Justice. The text of the Council decision has already been deposited in the Library of the House.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 29 March, Official Report, columns 797-98, concerning extension of a proposal blocking minority of 27 votes in an enlarged European Community Council of Ministers, if he will state, precisely, the nature of the qualifications now agreed, where they are available in written form, and published, and by whom they are authenticated.

The Prime Minister: The text of the Council decision on qualified majority voting has already been deposited in the Library of the House.

Labour-controlled Local Authorities

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe) of 12 April, Official Report, column 17, if he will list the Labour-controlled local authorities he referred to where there is corruption.

The Prime Minister: District auditors' reports and the outcome of criminal proceedings have revealed instances of malpractice and corruption in a number of Labour councils.

Civil Servants

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Prime Minister how many permanent secretaries, deputy secretaries and under secretaries left the civil service and subsequently took up appointments in the private sector since 1979; what was the average interval between leaving the service and taking up appointment in the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 April 1994]: Precise numbers could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, examination of a substantial sample of applications for approval to take appointments by civil servants in grades 1, 1A, 2 and 3 since 1984 shows an average interval of 3-4 months between leaving the service and proposed date of taking up a first private sector appointment. Not all appointments are necessarily taken up. Applications to take up second and subsequent appointments after leaving are not included in the average.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the need for comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation for disabled people.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 April 1994]: On a number of occasions, I have not only made clear my support for the principle of seeking to eliminate discrimination against people with disabilities, but also my reservations on the detailed practicalities of the present approach to comprehensive legislation. None the less, I shall of course want to see and consider the results of the deliberations of the Standing Committee on the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EC Legislation

45. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to improve the scrutiny of the activities and legislation of the European Community.

Mr. Newton: The scrutiny arrangements generally work well and need no fundamental change. They are, however, under constant review, and will continue to be developed as necessary.

Prime Minister's Question Time

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to ensure that Prime Minister's Question Time is used only for scrutiny of the actions of the Government.

Mr. Newton: Subject to Madam Speaker's views as to what is or is not in order, it is up to the hon. Members who ask questions to determine what questions they ask.

New Reichstag Building

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will obtain (a) for his office and (b) for the Library, a copy of the plans for the new Reichstag; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so.

Sanctions Policy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will move to set up a Select Committee to consider the effect of sanctions policy against countries such as Iraq, Libya and North Korea.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so. The hon. Member may wish to suggest the topic to the relevant Select Committee.

Parliamentary Estate (Costs)

33. Mr. Rooney: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what was the cost in 1993-94 of space in the parliamentary estate other than for the offices of hon. Members, their staff and staff of the House and those used for meetings and debates.

Mr. Beith: All but some 1 per cent. of the total area of the parliamentary estate is used for facilities for Members and staff. On a very rough apportionment, the annual cost to this House of the remaining space would be some £220,000, together with any costs of rent and rates for the outbuildings.

Strangers' Gallery

39. Mr. Bayley: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what financial provision has been made for increasing the seating capacity of the Strangers' Gallery.

Mr. Beith: None.

Accommodation (Commercial Organisations)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 505, when the last review took place of financial arrangements for commercial organisations with accommodation in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Channon: A review of the agreement with Thomas Cook was completed by the Administration Committee in March.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Official Duties

40. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on his duties as Lord President of the Council.

Mr. Newton: As Lord President, I am responsible for the work of the Privy Council Office, and for overseeing the functions of the Privy Council itself. In this connection, I present the Council business to Her Majesty.

I also act for the Queen as Visitor of a number of universities and colleges.

Appointments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Lord President of the Council what public consultations he undertakes before appointments are made by the Privy Council.

Mr. Newton: As indicated in my written answer to the hon. Member on 3 March, Official Report, column 868, consultation in respect of Privy Council appointments is conducted with the organisations concerned and with relevant Government Departments.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Office Space (Ipswich)

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many square feet of office space his Department leases, rents or owns inside the boundary of the borough of Ipswich; and what was the equivalent area in June 1979.

Mr. Burt: The full range of information is not available from 1979. However, from the information which is available, it is estimated that during the last 10 years the Department's occupancy covered a total of 32,722 sq. ft. spread over three sites:

—Eastgate House, Carr street—8,608 sq. ft.
—Warnford House, Coleman street—21,538 sq. ft.
—Princess House, Princess street—2,586 sq. ft.

At present the Department occupies 42,892 sq. ft. in one building within the borough—St. Felix house, Silent street. The property is leasehold and the Department is the sole tenant.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he has made for a review of the security of civil servants working in the Child Support Agency; if he will sanction extra resources for managers to implement measures which will help to allay staff fears over their safety, with particular reference to stringent procedures for dealing with incoming mail and the provision of escorts for field visits; and what he proposes in respect of the compulsory wearing of name badges and staff identifying themselves over the telephone or in correspondence as required by the citizens charter.

Mr. Burt: Measures to ensure the safety of Child Support Agency staff are the responsibility of Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive, who has ensured that comprehensive and professional security is provided for all the staff. There are strict procedures for the safe handling of incoming mail including the use of X-ray machines. Procedures are also in place to minimise the risk to visiting officers which include accompanied visiting where there is concern for personal safety.

The agency has a policy of giving names and wearing name badges as a matter of course. This is in the interest of providing good customer service to clients. It is recognised, however, that some staff may feel concerned about giving their names and those fears are treated sympathetically.

These areas are very sensitive and the chief executive and I are keeping them under close review.

Market Testing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will detail all the contracts on which his calculation of £136 million savings in the civil service market-testing programme is based; what was the value of each contract; what was the saving in each case; and what were the main items by which the savings were secured in each major case.

Mr. Hague: The £136 million detailed in the question is the value of savings achieved by the Government's market testing programme. As at 31 March 1994 this Department had awarded 55 contracts with a total value of £62·5 million which have achieved efficiency savings averaging some 32 per cent. Details of individual contract values and savings are commercial in confidence information and cannot be provided.

Occupational Deafness

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill), 30 March, Official Report, column 787, if he will list the occupational activities for which occupational deafness can be prescribed as a disease, in relation to which disablement benefit is payable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Occupational deafness is prescribed for disablement benefit purposes in relation to the following occupational activities:

1. The use of powered, but not hand powered, grinding tools on cast metal other than weld metal or on billets or blooms in the metal producing industry, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of those tools whilst they are being so used;
2. The use of pneumatic percussive tools on metal, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of those tools whilst they are being so used;
3. The use of pneumatic percussive tools for drilling rock in quarries or underground or in mining coal, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of those tools whilst they are being so used;
4. Work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of plant (excluding power press plant) engaged in the forging (including drop stamping) of metal by means of closed or open dies or drop hammers;
5. Work in textile manufacturing where the work is undertaken wholly or mainly in rooms or sheds in which there are machines engaged in weaving man-made or natural (including mineral) fibres or in the high speed false twisting of fibres;
6. The use of, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of, machines engaged in cutting, shaping or cleaning metal nails;
7. The use of, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of, plasma spray guns engaged in the deposition of metal;
8. The use of, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of, any of the following machines engaged in the working of wood or material composed partly of wood, that is to say; multi cutter moulding machines, planing machines, automatic or semi-automatic lathes, multiple cross-cut machines, automatic shaping machines, double-end tenoning machines, vertical spindle moulding machines (including high speed routing machines), edge banding machines, bandsawing machines with a blade width of not less than 75 millimetres and circular sawing machines in the operation of which the blade is moved towards the material being cut;
9. The use of chain saws in forestry.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 24 February at column 368, which sets out the further occupational activities to be added from October 1994.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to the control of nuclear proliferation he plans to raise at the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 to 19 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Nuclear non-proliferation does not feature on the agenda of this meeting.

Sweden

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the provisions in the accession document submitted by Sweden to the Council of the European Union on publication by civil servants of Government documents.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Sweden made a declaration in the Final Act attached to the treaty of accession welcoming the development now taking place in the European Union towards greater openness and transparency. The declaration noted that open government is a fundamental part of Sweden's constitutional, political and cultural heritage. The Union made a declaration in response noting the Swedish declaration and adding that the member states of the European Union take it for granted that as a member Sweden will fully comply with Community law in this respect. The United Kingdom fully supports this declaration by the Union.

Belize

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the treatment of the representative of Belize at the recent conference between the European Union and central American countries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have protested to the presidency and made clear to others our dissatisfaction at the mishandling of arrangements regarding Belizean attendance at the San José meeting. We shall continue to make clear both to member states and to countries in the region, that Belize as a stable, responsible democracy deserves inclusion in the San José process.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding territorial claims by Guatemala over Belize.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Guatemala recognised Belize as a sovereign and independent state in 1991. We will continue to encourage both countries to work for a full settlement of their territorial dispute.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the EC on the territorial integrity of Belize.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The European Community welcomed Guatemalan recognition of Belize in 1991 and its reaffirmation by the new Guatemalan Government in 1993. The European Community also urged Belize and Guatemala to continue to work for a full settlement of their territorial dispute.

North Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he or his officials at the United Nations have had with (a) the United States of America, (b) Russian and (c) Chinese ministers or officials in regard to the present situation in North Korea's nuclear programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: North Korea's nuclear programme is frequently a subject of discussion between us and the Governments of those states most directly concerned. The United Nations Security Council last considered the matter of North Korea's compliance with its IAEA safeguards agreement during the final week of March. Following discussions on this issue between all members of the Security Council, the President of the Security Council issued a statement on 31 March calling on North Korea to comply fully with its safeguards agreement.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extra resources the OPS unit of UNDP in Somaliland has recently received to help it in its work of disarming and rehabilitating militia in Somaliland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The national demobilisation committee project proposal, prepared with the assistance of the UNDP/OPS contracted team of Zimbabweans, is due to be presented to donors on 22 April 94. Decisions on funding are expected to be taken in the light of that presentation.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals Her Majesty's Government have put forward with a view to introducing monitoring and enforcement mechanisms in the forthcoming updating of the United Nations 1980 inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The United Kingdom is still considering the issues involved in the review conference.

Tigers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources are currently being made available by his Department for tiger conservation schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are most concerned about the plight of the tiger and are working through CITES to encourage consumer countries to stamp out the illegal trade in tiger parts. For this reason, we contributed towards the cost of the CITES high level delegation to the region. We welcome the development of the global tiger forum last month in India and will continue to participate actively in international efforts to save the tiger.

Macdeonia

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the European Court of Justice to offer an opinion on the referral submitted by the European Commission concerning the decision of the Government of Greece to impose an embargo against the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is as yet no indication when the European Court of Justice might offer a ruling. We have made clear our support for the Commission's decision to refer Greece's action to the European Court of Justice. We hope that this will lead to an early lifting of Greece's measures.

Immovable Property

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 101, on the report on information and protection of transactions concerning immovable property purchased by consumers, if he will now make it his policy to bring forward proposals to ensure that member Governments of the European Community are entitled (a) to see and (b) to publish for consultation all reports commissioned by the European Commission.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The publication of reports commissioned by the European Commission is a matter for the Commission itself. However, the majority of these reports are likely to be available under the agreement on public access to documents held by the Council and Commission.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 99, on information and protection of transactions concerning immovable property purchased by consumers, if he will make it his policy to bring forward proposals to ensure that in future the European Commission informs the United Kingdom Government of all the reports which it commissions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The European Commission commissions large numbers of reports annually to assist it in its work. These reports are the property of the Commission, which itself decides whether or not they should be published. However, under the code of conduct on access to Council and Commission documents, we would expect the public to have access to the majority of such reports.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 100, on the report on information and protection of transactions concerning immovable property purchased by consumers, if he will now make it his policy to require the European Commission to make known to the United Kingdom Government the cost of this and of all future such reports which it commissions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The cost of reports commissioned by the European Commission is a matter for the Commission itself. However the Commission must ensure that all its expenditure is consistent with the treaties and Community legislation, including requirements for sound financial management. It is also subject to examination by the Court of Auditors as to the legality and regularity of transactions.

EDUCATION

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the difference is between devolvement and delegation of local education authorities' moneys.

Mr. Forth: In the context of local management of schools, funds are customarily said to be delegated where they form part of the unhypothecated budget shares allocated to schools by formula, and devolved where they are made available to schools subject to conditions, specified by the local education authority, as to the purposes for which they may or may not be used.

History

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the future of the core status of the United Nations following the pending review of the history programme of study within the national curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend is currently considering advice from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority on slimming down the national curriculum. At this stage I cannot comment on the possible place of the United Nations within a revised history curriculum. The Secretary of State's proposals will be published in May and will be followed by a public consultation exercise.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which grant-maintained schools previously required to provide rooms for election meetings are now able to refuse.

Mr. Robin Squire: There has been no change in the statutory requirements governing the provision of rooms at schools for election meetings.

School Discipline

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children were (a) suspended and (b) expelled from school in (i) Humberside and (ii) England in each year since 1984.

Mr. Forth: Figures for each of the last 10 years are not available. Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with the summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system—NERS. In England, 2,910 permanent exclusions were reported in year one and 3,833 in year two. It is not possible to provide an area breakdown of the figures because of assurances given as to confidentiality.

Nursery Education

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his latest estimate of the number of children under five years of age in (a) nursery schools and (b) nursery classes in primary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1993, 53,000 children aged under five attended maintained nursery schools in England, either full or part time, and a further 287,000 children attended nursery classes in maintained primary schools.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken and what methods he has used in calculating his published figures concerning children under school age attending reception classes, nursery classes in primary schools, nursery schools and registered playgroups to avoid double counting of those children who, within the chosen period of any returns of single time census are attending, or have attended, more than one category of provision.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on pupils in schools is collected each January from schools. A pupil should be on the register of only one school at any one point in time. Information on children attending playgroups is not held centrally. Figures quoted about playgroup attendance are those supplied by the Pre-school Playgroups Association, to which about 80 per cent. of playgroups are affiliated. It is of course possible that a child attends both a play group and some form of schooling in the same year.

Preparation for Parenthood

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to include preparation for parenthood in the revised national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires the provision of a curriculum which prepares pupils for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life. In fulfilment of that, schools often include preparation for parenthood within their programmes of personal, social and health education in the wider curriculum.

School Age

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is Government policy as to the age at which a child must commence school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the Education Acts the statutory duties relating to compulsory education apply from the start of the school term following a pupil's fifth birthday. Local education authorities and schools may make provision for children before that age, but are not obliged to do so.

Law Students

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to undertake a fundamental review of the availability of public assistance for the payment of the fees of law students taking either the legal practice course or Bar finals.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Higher Education Funding

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to further broaden the funding base of higher education from industry.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 April 1994]: British universities received some £1·25 billion from private sources in 1991-92—just over a quarter of their total income. Private income, which includes income from industry for a range of services, has grown by some 70 per cent in real terms since 1985. In addition to income, institutions had outstanding borrowings of some £830 million from the private sector in 1992 for capital developments.

We welcome this broadening of the funding base, which is a key means by which universities can strengthen their independence. We are seeking to increase private finance for higher education in line with the private finance initiative.

EMPLOYMENT

Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 643-44, how many requests were received for entry packs for the 1993 national training awards; how many inquiries were received about career development loans; how many publications relating to "Just the Job" new measures were taken up; and what proportion of the total number produced this represented.

Miss Widdecombe: The national training awards office received 9,795 requests for entry packs for the 1993 competition; 36,390 inquiries were received about career development loans during their 1993-94 advertising campaign; 70,000 copies of the "Just the Job" were issued during the 1993-94 press advertisting campaign, representing 4·25 per cent. of the total produced.

Fishermen

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help is being given by fishing vessel owners in each port to assist this Department in identifying fishermen employed in the industry for redundancy; what access is being given by them to records on each; and what charges are being made.

Miss Widdecombe: Information has been obtained from a number of sources including the fishing vessel owners' records held in various ports. Vessel owners' associations have made their records available for inspection by departmental officials. No charge is being made for this service.

WALES

Pupil Costs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the unit cost per pupil for each Welsh local education authority for 1992-93 for (a) nursery primary pupils and (b) secondary pupils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Provisional data on the net expenditure per pupil in maintained schools in each local education authority area in Wales for 1992-93 are given in the table.

	[1]Nursery/Primary £ per pupil	[1]Secondary £ per pupil
Clwyd	1,486	2,243
Dyfed	1,807	2,164
Gwent	1,479	2,226
Gwynedd	1,664	2,423
Mid Glamorgan	1,476	2,300
Powys	1,911	2,088
South Glamorgan	1,494	2,144
West Glamorgan	1,794	2,403

[1] Local education authority and grant-maintained schools. Includes recharged expenditure on school catering and certain central services.

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all the non-departmental bodies in Wales that can be referred to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. Redwood: The following bodies in Wales are within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration:

Agricultural Wages Committees
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation
Countryside Council for Wales
Development Board for Rural Wales (except housing functions)
Housing for Wales
Office of HM Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales
Sports Council for Wales
Wales Tourist Board
Welsh Language Board
Welsh Office

The commissioner may investigate actions taken on behalf of a Government Department or other authority within his jurisdiction.

Braille Ballot Papers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce legislation to provide Braille ballot papers at polling stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Forestry Commission Land Sales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all Forestry Commission land sold in Mid Glamorgan since 1 January 1991, giving the hectarage and the price paid per hectare; and what information he has on the current use of that land.

Mr. Redwood: The areas of forest land which have been sold by the Forestry Commission in Mid Glamorgan since 1 January 1991 are shown in the table. The price paid per hectare is given where the purchaser has agreed that such information can be made public. The Forestry Commission does not maintain records of the subsequent use of the woodlands it sells; however, woodland cannot normally be converted to another use without planning permission.

Name of Property	Area (hectares)	Price (£) Per hectare

Design Council

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the closure of the Design Council in Wales; and what plans he has to ensure that industry in Wales continues to receive a design service.

Mr. Redwood: Various views have been expressed on the value of the Design Council in Wales. In recognition of the important role of good design, I am currently considering possible support measures.

Further Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Development Agency for Further Education as he expects it to affect further education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have no knowledge of a development agency for further education. However, a new body is to be established in place of the further education unit and further education staff college which between them carried out much important work in developing the FE sector in England and Wales.

I expect the new, as yet unnamed, body to complement the work of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales and provide the advice, support and other services that colleges and interested organisations will need.

Deeside Industrial Park

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the measures he is taking to improve access to and from the Deeside industrial park, Deeside, Clwyd, with the objective of increasing productivity, ending lorry queues and improving road safety; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The capacity of the Deeside industrial park junction is to be increased as part of proposals to improve the A550 trunk road between the River Dee and Woodbank junction.

School Buses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he proposes to give additional moneys to local education authorities in Wales to enable them to fit seat belts in school minibuses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultation he has had with local education authorities in Wales concerning the need to fit seat belts in minibuses used to transport school children.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government are anxious to do all that we can to limit minibus and coach accidents and to mitigate their effect. We are currently reviewing the whole technical and cost implications of seat belts in these vehicles, including the "three for two" concession in home-to-school transport.

Overgrazing

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what involvement the Countryside Council for Wales has had in operating the measures introduced to prevent overgrazing under the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Countryside Council for Wales and other environmental and farming interests were consulted about the introduction of these measures. The operational responsibility rests with my officials assisted by Agricultural Development Advisory Service specialists.

Lambs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to introduce weather aid to compensate farmers in parts of Wales affected by exceptional losses of lambs resulting from extreme weather during the 1994 lambing season; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I sympathise with sheep farmers who have suffered higher than usual losses of lambs this season, but it is not the Government's policy to provide compensation for the day-to-day business risks usually associated with livestock production.

Arable Farmers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect on arable farmers in Wales of the division of Wales into less-favoured area/non-less-favoured area sectors for the purposes of grant payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No producer will receive less this year than last, subject to any changes in the green rate in force on 1 July 1994 and provided that the total area on which payments are made remains constant. Specialist cereal growers, most of whom are in the non-less-favoured area sector, will benefit from higher payments.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the measures he has planned to eliminate traffic jams from Sealand, through Garden city, Queensferry, Shotton and Connahs quay to Kelsterton on the A550 and A494; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The communities referred to are along roads which are the responsibility of Clwyd county council, which is planning to build the third Dee crossing. This is expected to alleviate traffic along those routes. My right hon. Friend plans to upgrade the Deeside industrial park junction on the A550 which will complement the county council's proposals.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the membership of the Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I have appointed Professor Eric Sunderland as chairman of the commission from 1 April. Professor Sunderland replaces Lady Crawshay, who has chaired the commission since 1979.

I have also re-appointed Mr. Richard Hall Williams as deputy chairman and appointed Mr. Lloyd FitzHugh in succession to Mr. Ray Lacey.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Pergau Dam

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the total expected cost to the United Kingdom Exchequer of support for the Pergau dam project;

(2) what the total cost of the Pergau dam project to the United Kingdom Exchequer has been to date;

(3) if he will set out the planned schedule of all future disbursements for the Pergau dam project from the Overseas Development Administration, with the planned dates and amounts in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade at column 360. In addition to the total estimate of interest rate support costs to the Exchequer for the Pergau project of £255·310 million, a further £1·035 million in total is expected to be spent on technical, financial and environmental monitoring of the implementation of the project. The total estimated cost to the Exchequer of the project is therefore £256·345 million.

The total cost of the project to the Exchequer to date is £29·621 million. This covers actual expenditure between the financial years 1991-92—1993-94 on ECGD and ODA interest rate support costs of £29·202 million and ODA expenditure on technical, financial and environmental monitoring of £0·419 million.

The current planned schedule for estimated future disbursements from ODA for (A) interest rate support costs contributed by ODA and (B) technical, financial and environmental monitoring costs of the implementation of the project is as set out in the table. The payments under (A) are made in June and December in each financial year; the payments under (B) for monitoring implementation of the project are made as work proceeds, without any pre-planned disbursement dates.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current calculations about the food needs of Bosnia; and what is the current rate of supply.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UNHCR currently estimates a requirement of 45,000 metric tons per month of food for Bosnia Herzegovina. Prior to the airlift being temporarily suspended on 11 April the delivery rate—for March—was 82 per cent.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current assessment of the need for medical supplies in Bosnia and the adequacy of that supply.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Until a permanent cessation of hostilities is agreed, it will not be possible to provide medical supplies sufficient to meet all the needs throughout Bosnia. The United Nations agencies have appealed for US$1·76 million in emergency aid and health supplies for April which we understand is fully covered by donor pledges.

Market Testing

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the cost to be incurred for each exercise in market testing in progress or planned within the Overseas Development Administration; and what is his projection for the saving to be made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the "Competing for Quality" initiative, quality improvements are as important as financial savings. We do not make presumptions about levels of savings in advance of the test.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what market tests have been completed; what market tests are in progress; and what market tests are planned for the Overseas Development Administration;

(2) what was the cost of each exercise in market testing completed to date within the Overseas Development Administration; and how much money was saved as a result of the exercise.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The requested information is recorded in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report 1994" published in March, Cm. 2540.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Independent Television

2. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy on independent television; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: We aim to increase diversity and choice for viewers and to promote competition in the provision of services.

Media Ownership

17. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he now expects to issue his conclusions on the review into media ownership and cross-ownership.

Mr. Brooke: I would like this review to be completed as rapidly as possible. Officials will make recommendations to Ministers this summer, but the timing of an announcement about the outcome will depend on a number of factors, including the nature of those recommendations and any legislative implications.

BBC Charter

19. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to redistribute existing BBC local radio wavebands to the commercial sector.

Mr. Brooke: Our policy is to encourage the broadcasters to reduce the broadcasting of the same programmes on AM and FM frequencies. AM frequencies used by the BBC for local radio will be released to the Radio Authority, if they are needed for the development of independent local radio.

23. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he next plans to meet the chairman of the BBC governors to discuss the renewal of the BBC charter.

Mr. Brooke: I shall be meeting the BBC chairman next month.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will place in the Library a copy of all submissions made on the renewal of the BBC charter.

Mr. Brooke: No. We received more than 6,000 responses to the consultation document. I encouraged organisations to publish their responses, and many did so, but some organisations asked for their replies to be kept private. Last July, I placed in the Library a report analysing the replies from the public and a list of the organisations which responded.

Brass Bands

20. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance his Department can give to coalfield brass bands.

Mr. Sproat: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Enright) earlier today.

Film Industry

21. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many feature films were produced in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Industry sources indicate that in 1993, 39 feature films were produced in the United Kingdom and a further 28 films were shot abroad with the participation of United Kingdom production companies. The total of 67 films represents a significant increase over the previous year, during which 47 films were produced with United Kingdom involvement.

Foreign Visitors

22. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made as to the factors which attract foreigners to Great Britain.

Mr. Sproat: The statutory tourist boards produce regular surveys which show that Britain has a wide range of attractions for foreign visitors. Among the most important of these are a number of areas supported by my Department: the built heritage, museums and galleries, and the arts.

Art Galleries

24. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent consultations he has had about the availability of works of art in galleries for public display.

Mr. Sproat: In general, the display of works of art to the public in museums and galleries is a matter for individual institutions.

Tourist Sector Jobs

25. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his appraisal of the opportunities for job creation in the tourist sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: Employment in the tourism sector has shown steady expansion since the early 1980s and by June 1993 was just under 1·5 million, representing 7 per cent. of all employees in employment in Great Britain. The prospects for future growth in tourism employment opportunities remain good. The British Tourist Authority BTA—forecasts growth in overseas visits and expenditure over the next five years, and this is expected to be accompanied by growth in domestic tourism. The impact of such expenditure is spread widely throughout the economy as it includes spending on accommodation, eating out, shopping, travel within the United Kingdom and on services and entertainment. Many nominally non-tourism businesses derive a substantial part of their trade from tourists. Indeed, BTA estimates that, for every one direct job in the tourist industry, half an indirect job is created elsewhere in the economy.

Mirror Group Newspapers

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he had with the President of the Board of Trade over the acquisition of Newspaper Publishing by Mirror Group Newspapers.

Mr. Brooke: My Department's views on this matter were sought by the Department of Trade and Industry, and given to it in terms approved by me.

Bronze Age Hill Sites

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy in providing the services of custodians at bronze age hill sites.

Mr. Brooke: Sites which are my responsibility are entrusted to the care of English Heritage. Decisions on the deployment of custodians are for that body.

Museums and Galleries (Attendance)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will now publish the actual, as distinct from the forecast, attendance figures for the financial year ended 31 March reported by the national museums and galleries in England for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions but including their outstations, with the definitive, as distinct from the provisional, figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Sproat: I refer to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 14 February at column 578.

European Football Championship

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the Football Association with a view to giving Government assistance to that body to provide for a European football championship competition in Great Britain in 1996.

Mr. Brooke: My Department is actively assisting the Football Association—FA—in the arrangements for the 1996 European championship through its representation on the FA's central organising committee for the event. I have been involved in promoting the event and I was delighted to attend the qualifying draw for the championship in Manchester on 22 January when I had the opportunity to discuss matters with the chairman of the FA.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what computer systems his Department have brought in for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Sir John Wheeler: Details of all computer systems brought in by the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments during the last five years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, network computer systems, in excess of the EC threshold, have been brought in as follows:

System – (Hardware)	Function	Still in use
Integrated Purchasing System – (AST)	Computerised Purchasing	Yes
Human Resource Management System – (MDL)	Integrated Personnel, Superannuation and Payroll System	Yes
Two Mainframes – (ICL)	To provide a contingency service for Computer Bureau	Yes

Electricity Share Offer

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 1034, how many applications were received in response to the Northern Ireland Electricity share offer.

Mr. Tim Smith: Four hundred and ninety thousand applications were received in the public offer for sale of shares in Northern Ireland Electricity plc. The offer was 3·9 times oversubscribed.

Social Fund

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will adopt to ensure that applications in respect of the social fund will be expedited.

Mr. Tim Smith: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Wylie to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 18 April 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what steps will be taken to ensure that applications in respect of the Social Fund will be expedited.

During the 1993/94 year a new Social Fund computer system was introduced to all social security offices throughout Northern Ireland. The introduction of this system will help to ensure that Social Fund applications are processed promptly and accurately and therefore provide an efficient service to customers.

Work is also continuing to improve the design of Social Fund application forms. It is aimed at helping customers to supply all the information needed to allow informed decisions to be made on applications. This should reduce the number of instances where Social Fund officers have to contact customers for further information and will expedite the process leading to decisions.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Roads

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to address rising volumes and traffic delays in terms of major and minor roads infrastructure provision in each roads division in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The capital works programmes of Department of the Environment Roads Service have been developed to address the ever-increasing demands on the road network. During the 1994-95 financial year it is planned to spend some £29 million on major and minor road works in Northern Ireland. Individual schemes are prioritised within the funds available.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the capital expenditure on minor roads provision in each of the roads divisions from 1 April 1981 to 31 March 1984.

Mr. Tim Smith: Expenditure on minor roads schemes —that is, mainly those costing less than £200,000—in each division of DOE Roads Service for the period in question has been as follows:

Expenditure in £000s

Financial year	Ballymena	Belfast	Coleraine	Craigavon	Downpatrick	Omagh	Total
1981-82	1,058	1,731	1,706	935	1,158	1,823	8,411

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the capital expenditure on major roads provision in each of the roads divisions from 1 April 1981 to 31 March 1994.

Mr. Tim Smith: Expenditure on major roads schemes —that is, mainly those costing over £200,000—in each division of Department of the Environment Roads Service for the period in question has been as follows:

Expenditure in £000s

Financial year	[1]HQ	Ballymena	Belfast	Coleraine	Craigavon	Downpatrick	Omagh	Total

Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what statistical or empirical research his Department is undertaking or has commissioned into the impact of the abolition of the right to silence under the provisions of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988; the date on which the work commenced; and when he expects the findings will be (a) completed and (b) made public;

(2) if he will identify the statistical or empirical research on the impact of the abolition of the right to silence under the provisions of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, published or unpublished; and if he will place a copy of the relevant documents in the Library;

(3) if he will list any statistical or empirical research on the workings of the relevant provisions of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, published or unpublished; and if he will place a copy of the relevent documents in the Library;

(4) what evidence he has as to the effect of the abolition of the right to silence in Northern Ireland under the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Sir John Wheeler: In 19990, the Northern Ireland Office carried out a statistical analysis of data gathered on a small sample of supsects interviewed by police. The research is, however, of limited value because of the absence of any pre-1988 data with which to compare it. A summary of the research findings has been made available to members of the Standing Committee on the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill; and a copy will now be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Further research is being commissioned by the Northern Ireland Office. This research should provide a fuller legal analysis of the operation and effect of articles 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988. It is hoped to complete this by March 1995.

Northern Ireland International Airport

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when consultations took place between the Northern Ireland Office and operators of the Northern Ireland international airport, and the representative organisation of the employees in respect of the future pension arrangements; and whether it was conducted by means of (a) a meeting, (b) correspondence or (c) both.

Mr. Tim Smith: In response to concerns expressed about the future pension arrangements for employees at Belfast international airport, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland wrote to the Northern Ireland committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions and the Amalgamated Transport and General Workers Union on 11 August 1993.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he, or a Minister from his Department, will meet the Northern Ireland Airports Police Association to discuss the future policing of the airport following the passing of the recent order relating to the airport's future management.

Mr. Tim Smith: My predecessor met representatives of the Belfast Airport Police Association on 7 September 1993. At that meeting and in subsequent correspondence, he discussed in detail the arrangements for the future policing of Belfast international airport. If the association has any queries additional to those already discussed, I will be happy to provide an explanation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the implications of privatisation for the powers of constables in the Northern Ireland airports police.

Mr. Tim Smith: On privatisation of Belfast international airport there will be no change to the existing powers of airport constables.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has studied the circumstances surrounding the need for Parliament to pass the British Transport Police (Jurisdiction) Act 1994 following the management and commercial reorganisation of British Rail, with a view to ascertaining if there will be a need for any comparable legislation in relation to the Northern Ireland Airports Police following the management and commercial reorganisation at the Belfast international airport.

Mr. Tim Smith: The proposed privatisation of Belfast international airport will not involve any changes to the jurisdiction of the airport constabulary. The Transport Police (Jurisdiction) Act 1994 has no implications for the statutory provision for airport policing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the existing pension conditions arrangements for employees at Northern Ireland international airport will be maintained following the coming into force of the order that set up a separate company to operate the airport in anticipation of its privatisation.

Mr. Tim Smith: When the assets of Northern Ireland Airports Limited are transferred to the successor company, the pension rights of airport employees will be preserved by way of a deed.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if pension arrangements for employees of the Northern Ireland international airport will be protected following privatisation.

Mr. Tim Smith: It would be inappropriate and contrary to estsblished policy to give assurance concerning the continued assumption after the sale of the successor company of pension fund obligations by any new owner of Belfast international airport.

Criminal Injury Compensation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Royal Ulster Constabulary Police Federation about proposals to alter arrangements for criminal injury compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The chairman of the Police Federation for Northern Ireland wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State on 17 November 1992 about this matter. A reply was issued on 18 December 1992.

Unlogged Fish Catches

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to stop the landing of unlogged fish around the coast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The activities of the fishing industry are monitored both at sea and on shore by the fisheries inspectorate of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. Information or reports suggesting the occurrence of unlogged landings are immediately investigated, and prosecutions taken as appropriate. Such landings undermine the efforts being made to conserve stocks and jeopardise livelihoods of fishermen and those dependent on the industry.

HEALTH

Health Information

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total annual budget, including staffing costs, of (a) the health information service and (b) the health literature line.

Mr. Sackville: For available information on the costs of the health information service I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 8 March at columns 166-67.

The cost of the health literature line for 1993-94 was £263,365.

Policy

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her plans for the work of the Department in 1994-95 and beyond.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have agreed a statement of the aims, goals and priorities for my Department for 1994-95 and subsequent years.

The statement covers the whole range of the Department's work relating to health and social services, European Community and other international issues, and internal management.

The statement includes our specific priorities for the national health service executive, which are taken forward in more detail in the NHS executive's business plan for 1994-95 approved by the NHS policy board.

Copies of both statements have been placed in the Library.

London Ambulance Service

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue and capital expenditure of the London ambulance service on mobile communication equipment and command and control systems in each financial year since 1991-92; and what plans exist for 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: Figures provided by the London ambulance service are:

Year	Capital (note[1]) £000	Revenue (note[2]) £000
1991-92	982	667
1992-93	569	653
[3]1993-94	90	652

[1] Capital expenditure on computer aided despatch system (including mobile communications equipment).
[2] Revenue expenditure on maintenance of new and existing radio and communications equipment.
The plans for 1994-95 include upgrading the radio system; issuing hand portable radios and other computer and communications projects relating to ambulance control.
[3] Provisional.

NHS Reforms (London)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many copies of "NHS Changes in London: Answers to the Questions You've Been Asking", have been printed; how many have been distributed; what was the total cost; and from which budget the cost has been drawn.

Mr. Sackville: The number of copies printed was 3·5 million. A total of 3·28 million copies have been distributed to households within in the M25 area, and the rest have been made available to national health service trusts, health authorities, general practitioners, purchasers, family health services authorities, main libraries and citizens advice bureaux within the distribution area. The estimated total cost is £150,000, paid for from the Department's information division publicity budget.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 68, (1) in which reviews pernicious anaemia has been considered for inclusion on the list of medical conditions which confer prescription charge exemption; and what were the reasons for not including it on that list;

(2) when the list of medical conditions which confer prescription charge exemption has been reviewed; and what representations and discussions take place in the course of such a review.

Mr. Sackville: We regularly receive representations about extending the list of medical conditions which confer exemption from prescription charges to include other illnesses, including pernicious anaemia. The arrangements for exemption on medical grounds were last reviewed as part of the fundamental review of health expenditure in 1993. No options for change within what can be afforded were identified. Charge remission available under the national health service low income scheme and prescription prepayment certificates ensure that no one who is not exempt from prescription charges need be deterred from obtaining necessary medication for financial reasons.

Accident and Emergency Provision

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what accident and emergency provision will be made for residents and workers in the capital at the minor injuries units when they have sustained major injuries and conditions.

Mr. Sackville: Where a major injury or condition has been sustained and an ambulance is called, the casualty would be conveyed to a full accident and emergency department. Should an attender at a minor injuries unit be assessed as having sustained injuries or a condition requiring attention beyond the scope of the service, they would be transferred without delay by ambulance to an accident and emergency department.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what accident and emergency provision will be made for residents and night shift workers in the capital after the minor injuries units have closed for the weekend.

Mr. Sackville: Some minor injuries units will remain open at weekends. Precise hours of opening are, and will be, arranged to reflect known previous attendance pattens at nearby accident and emergency departments. They will be kept under review. Accident and emergency departments will remain open on a seven-days-a-week basis for those with more severe injuries or conditions.

Breast Prostheses

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what specific arrangements are made for a woman who has suffered a double mastectomy to receive prostheses on the NHS;

(2) which breast prostheses are available on national health service prescription;

(3) for which breast prostheses her Department will pay for a woman, on income support, who has suffered a double mastectomy.

Mr. Sackville: The arrangements for the supply of breast prostheses to women who have suffered a double mastectomy are no different from those which apply to women who have had a single mastectomy. Breast prostheses are available through the hospital service. They are not available on a general practitioner's prescription. Where they are prescribed by a hospital consultant they are supplied and fitted free of charge to the patient, regardless of income. Individual consultants are able to prescribe whatever types of prostheses best meet the needs of their patients, taking into account other priorities and the availability of resources. If a woman has a personal preference for a more expensive type of prosthesis than that supplied by the hospital, she is free to make her own arrangements and meet the whole cost.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she has had with Mastectomy Advice Self-Help concerning the availability of prostheses.

Mr. Sackville: None.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) by what amount the budget of the United Teaching Hospitals Trust has been increased for 1994-95 to reflect an acquired responsibility for the management of Wharfedale hospital;

(2) by what amount the budget of St. James's University Hospital NHS Trust has been increased for 1994-95 to reflect its acquired responsibility for the management of Seacroft hospital.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health gave him on 9 March at columns 304-05.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many staff working at Wharfedale hospital joined the payroll of United Leeds Teaching Hospitals Trust on 1 April;

(2) how many staff working at Seacroft hospital joined the payroll of St. James's University Hospital NHS Trust on 1 April.

Mr. Sackville: None. Staff at Seacroft and Wharfedale hospitals are employed by Leeds health authority.

Health Survey

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions she gave when commissioning the 1992 health survey for England from the social surveys division of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys; on the inclusion or exclusion of income and class in its analysis.

Mr. Sackville: In the report of the 1992 "Health Survey for England," copies of which are available in the Library, social class as well as other socio-economic indicators such as economic activity or employment status, housing tenure, marital status, ethnic group and household type is discussed in the text where significant findings have emerged. Data on income are not collected in the health survey. The information collected has to be limited because of the need to keep interviews to a reasonable length, concentrating on the main purpose for which the survey was set up.

A full data set for the 1992 survey for general access will be lodged with the Economic and Social Research Centre archive in due course.

Hip Replacement

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hip replacement operations and (b) revision hip replacement operations have taken place in the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Finished consultant episodes, NHS hospitals, England

Hip replacement operations[1]	1989-90	[2]1990-91
Total	50,790	50,725
Revisions	3,562	3,459

[1] Total Prosthetic Replacement of Hip Joint and Prosthetic Replacement of Head of Femur.
[2] Provisional.

Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 392, if she will now publish a table of written complaints by patients about (a) hospital and (b) community health services in each region in 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is due to be published soon in a booklet entitled "Written complaints by or on behalf of patients, England—financial year 1992-93" copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Hospitals, London

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people there are to each doctor-nurse team in the capital; and how this will alter after the closure of accident and emergency facilities in London hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: In inner London in 1992, there were 480 people per hospital and general practice doctor, and 97 people per hospital and general practice nurse.

No accident and emergency facilities will close until alternative services are available. Therefore we would not expect any significant overall change in the ratio of medical and nursing staff per head of population as a result of changes in the pattern of casualty services.

NHS Reorganisation, London

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the effects of reorganisation of the NHS in London on mid-Essex health services.

Mr. Sackville: The changes we are making in London's health services will enable health authorities to contract for more cost-effective services. The specialty reviews provided advice to health authorities on the disposition of specialist services following changes in London. Health authorities in Essex are currently taking the specialty reviews into account, before forming purchasing plans for contracts with hospitals in mid-Essex.

Abortion

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals and private units offer a medical abortion service with mifepristone; and what are the addresses of those that do offer this treatment.

Mr. Sackville: Information about national health service hospitals performing medical termination of pregnancy using Mifegyne—mifepristone—is only available from the abortion notification forms submitted to the chief medical officer under regulation 4 of the Abortion Regulations 1991. This information is subject to the restrictions set out in regulation 5 and cannot therefore be published.

A list of places in the private sector that have been approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, to provide medical termination of pregnancy will be placed in the Library.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received in respect of the recent survey of abortion patients at the Pregnancy Advisory Service clinic carried out by the Pro-choice Alliance.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to reduce waiting times and improve access to national health service abortion services.

Mr. Sackville: Arrangements for purchasing abortion services under the national health service are the responsibility of individual district health authorities in the light of their assessment of local needs and priorities.

Managers (Relocation Costs)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been paid by (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, and (c) trusts for the relocation costs of newly employed managers; and what is the average amount paid to each manager, for each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure that health authorities and trusts do not exceed their powers in the payment of relocation expenses for newly appointed managers.

Mr. Sackville: Relocation expenses for all staff, including managers, who work for health authorities and those working for national health service trusts on national terms and conditions of service are governed by section 26 of the General Whitley Council handbook, copies of which are available in the Library. The agreement, which took effect last year, allows employers to reimburse any reasonable costs incurred by an employee on relocating to a new area and does not lay down specific limits.

Under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, trusts have the freedom to make their own terms and conditions of service. Trusts, however, have every incentive to keep costs to a minimum in this area thereby increasing the amount of resources available for patient care.

Rampton Hospital

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy in respect of Rampton hospital, Nottinghamshire, becoming a trust hospital in the near future; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: No decision has been taken to extend trust status to Rampton hospital or the other special hospitals.

After-school and Holiday Places

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the latest estimates of (a) the number of after-school places for children aged over five years in Great Britain and (b) the number of holiday places for children aged over five years in Great Britain.

Mr. Bowis: Information collected centrally in England relates to out-of-school clubs and holiday schemes for those aged five to seven years provided by, registered with or known to local authorities. Latest available estimates for England are 11,900 places in the former and 47,500 in the latter at 31 March 1992.

Information about the number of out-of-school places and holiday places in Scotland and Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

Nurse/Patient Ratio

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 514, if she will provide comparable information on the qualified nurse/patient ratio on a regional basis.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 29 March 1994]: The information will be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Computers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what computer systems his Department has brought in for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case, whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Lang: Because of the wide range of the Scottish Office's activities, this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he collects about specific skill shortages in the economy; if he will list them; and what action he is taking to counteract such shortages.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend does not collect information about skill shortages in the economy. It is an objective of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to improve the performance of new and existing businesses by increasing their commitment to plan and invest in training and development to meet business needs. Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are also responsible for funding and co-ordinating the provision of training for young people and unemployed adults through local enterprise companies to meet the needs of the local labour markets.

IACS

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a short supplementary booklet explaining integrated administration and control systems; and if he will send such a booklet out with the official form.

Sir Hector Monro: An explanatory booklet on IACS has been produced and sent to Scottish producers with the blank IACS forms for 1994.

Strathkelvin District Council

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what condiderations underlay the reduction in the general services capital allocation for Strathkelvin district between 1994-95 and 1996-97; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Local authority capital financial plans are considered afresh each year in light of the outcome of the Government's public expenditure survey generally. Capital allocations are determined having regard to the aggregate public expenditure resources available, the relative needs of individual authorities as expressed in their financial plans, the ability of authorities to finance capital expenditure at their own hand, and past and projected spending levels and patterns.

In the case of Strathkelvin district council, it benefited from a general decision that no authority should take a reduction in its allocation for 1994-95 on its general services programme. The provisional allocations for 1995-96 and 1996-97 were, however, set at a level which reflects both the fact that aggregate resources being provisionally allocated from this programme are reduced and our view of the council's need for capital allocations to undertake capital expenditure given the level of resources available to it overall.

By their very nature the provisional allocations will fall to be reviewed. This will happen later in the year in response to the council's 1994 capital financial plan.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount spent by his Department in the last five years for which figures are available on consultancy contracts; if he will list each consultancy firm, the subject of assignment and, if appropriate, the executive agency for whom the consultancy was carried out; which executive agencies and quangos responsible to or appointed by him are excluded from the information provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 21 February at columns 51-52 and to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 16 March at columns 659-60.

Members' Interests

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what register his Department maintains of meetings between hon. Members and Ministers where the hon. Member concerned has a declared financial interest in the company or organisation which he is lobbying for, discussing or representing at any such meeting; if such register of meetings is available for public inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No register of this nature is maintained by my Department.

Public Appointments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available on the names, addresses, salaries, honoraria or allowances, occupations, former occupations and known political affiliations of people appointed by him to outside bodies and quangos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Most of this information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on political affiliation is neither sought nor recorded. The levels of any salary or fee paid to a member of a nationalised industry, non-departmental public body or NHS body sponsored by my Department is listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each appointment for which he is responsible which falls for renewal between 30 April and 31 December, giving the name of the quango, executive agency or outside body, the title of the appointment, the name of the current postholder, the salary, honoraria or allowance, and the date of renewal.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the cost of reorganising the British Railways Board for rail privatisation; and if this includes the cost of new liveries for British Rail staff and trains;

(2) what was the cost of setting up Railtrack plc; and whether this includes the cost of new signs and logos.

Mr. Freeman: Reorganisation costs incurred by British Rail, including costs of setting up Railtrack, total £66 million up to 31 March 1994. The allocation of spending within British Rail and Railtrack is a matter for the businesses concerned. The Government are confident that these initial costs will be more than offset by the benefits resulting from privatisation.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the minimum service specification for each of the six shadow rail franchises will require the shadow franchisee to run as a minimum as many trains on each existing route as in the current British Rail timetable;

(2) whether the performance standards specified in the shadow franchise agreements for each of the six shadow rail franchises will be at least as demanding as those operated hitherto by British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Paragraph 18 of the objectives, instructions and guidance issued to the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising on 22 March by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State requires that for the initial letting of franchises, the specification of minimum service levels for railway passenger services is to be based on that being provided by British Rail immediately prior to franchising, taking into account the existence of, and justification for, seasonal variations in service schedules.

Paragraph 21 of the objectives, instructions and guidance states that when the Franchising Director specifies the quality of service to be provided by a franchisee, the performance standards he sets should have the effect of maintaining or improving standards.

Highways Agency

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of setting up the new Highways Agency.

Mr. Key: Approximately £173,000, including the cost of the project team; the costs of producing the framework document, business plan and explanatory brochure about the work of the agency, and the cost of functions to mark the launch of the agency.

Road Safety

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there are regular meetings between the Government Departments of Transport, Education, Health and the Home Office specifically to review and co-ordinate activities to enhance road safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: There are frequent meetings between the Department of Transport and other Government Departments with an interest in road safety issues, including those mentioned in the question. Moreover, all the Departments mentioned are represented on the "Health of the Nation" accident prevention task force. I am satisfied that the current arrangements allow for adequate co-ordination within Government of activities to enhance road safety.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will inquire into the sale of marks market testing process at the DVLA; and to what extent the process was carried out in accordance with the Government's guidelines.

Mr. Key: I am satisfied that the process of letting the most recent contract for the sale of registration numbers work fully complied with civil service tendering procedures.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations Capita made to him regarding the way the original market test for the sale of marks functions at the DVLA was carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Concerns were expressed by Capita and others following the original tendering process in 1992 for the sale of vehicle registration numbers telesales contract. These centred on the basis upon which the in-house team was allowed to put forward proposals. The tendering exercise has been re-run using criteria based on the maximisation of revenue and the development of a cohesive marketing strategy. Tenderers were judged on their ability to maximise revenue from the sale of numbers, expertise in telesales and innovation and experience within the marketing field, as well as cost.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the sale of marks market test contract at the DVLA was awarded on the basis of the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Key: No. It is the Department's view that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 do not apply in this case.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Teledata contract bid for the sale of marks function at the DVLA;

(2) what were the reasons for not awarding the original contract for the sale of marks to the in-house team; what was the difference in money terms between the lowest bid and the successful bid; and by whom the lowest bid was submitted.

Mr. Key: Following a competitive tender exercise in 1992 in which the contract to operate the agency's telesales facility was offered to the market, it became apparent that the process adopted did not fully reflect tendering procedures as set out in "Competing for Quality", Cm 1730. The tender competition was accordingly re-run. Details of individual bids are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list contracts awarded by his Department to Teledata Ltd. since 1987;

(2) whether Teledata Ltd. bid for the original sale of marks contract at the DVLA prior to the re-run of the recent market test.

Mr. Key: Teledata Ltd. won the contract to operate a telephone information service and a sale of vehicle registration numbers telesales facility in December 1989. The company did not tender in the exercise held in 1992. Under changed ownership it won the contract in the latest sale of registration numbers market test. No other contract has been let to this company by my Department.

Safety Levy

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider introducing a £1 levy on all car insurance premiums to be directed to transport safety and transport education measures.

Mr. Key: We have no plans to introduce such a levy.

Cars

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cars he estimates were on the roads in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The numbers of cars licensed in Great Britain at the end of 1992 and 1993 respectively is as follows:

Great Britain cars

Year	(1,000s)
1992	20,681
1993	[1]20,988

[1] Provisional.

Beer

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he last met the executive of the Brewers Society to discuss drink and driving;

(2) when he will next meet the Brewers Society to discuss the sale of beers with high alcohol content and their impact on driving ability.

Mr. Key: I met the director of the Brewers Society on 28 June 1993. I have no arrangements at present to meet the society again, but would be happy to do so if it wished.

Bicester Hunt (Trespass)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether British Rail is to take any action to prosecute a trespass on railway lines by the Bicester hunt on 13 January.

Mr. Freeman: We are not aware of the incident referred to by the hon. Member. If he will write to the Department with details we shall see that the matter is investigated further.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total income to the Treasury from the vehicle tax disc in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: Net vehicle excise duty, excluding refunds, for the 1992-93 financial year was £3,225 million.

Dangerous Substances

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the action the owners of tankers carrying dangerous substances must take in the event of an emergency to ensure that dealing with any spillage, or fire can be carried out with the utmost protection to personnel who have to attend to such an emergency.

Mr. Key: Under the Road Traffic (Carriage of Dangerous Substances in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1992 the operator of a road tanker or of a vehicle with a tank container carrying a dangerous substance must ensure that its driver has received adequate information in writing about the identity of the substance, the quantity to be carried, the nature of the hazards created by the substance and the action to be taken in an emergency. The driver must keep that written information in the vehicle cab, so that it is readily available if needed by the emergency services.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will press, through the European Fire Service Organisation, for the retention of some form of emergency action code, including hazchem, to be used throughout the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: It is for the fire service inspectorate to press the case for an international emergency action code in the International Technical Committee for the Prevention and Extinguishing of Fires (CITF). I understand it will continue to do so.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will take steps to ensure that all road tankers carrying dangerous substances will continue to carry the necessary hazard warnings which identify the substance carried; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the United Kingdom system of tanker marking, as distinct from the continental system, will be used at all times when dangerous substances are being carried on roads in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: A draft EEC directive on the carriage of dangerous goods by road currently contains a provision which will allow British road tankers carrying dangerous substances in the United Kingdom to continue to display the existing United Kingdom hazard warning labels. Vehicles registered in other countries will however be allowed on our roads, as they always have been hitherto, if they display the hazard warning plates required by the European agreement concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods by road. The United Kingdom has so far been unable to persuade a majority of the countries party to the agreement to amend it so as to adopt the United Kingdom system.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information technology consultants her Department has employed in each of the last five years; for what purpose; and at what total cost.

Mr. Jack: There follows a list giving details of information technology consultants employed by the Department in the three years 1991-94 and the tasks on which they were engaged. The associated costs are as follows:

	£ million
1991-92	4·0
1992-93	5·2
1993-94	8·3

Information for the earlier two years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

City Farms

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was her Department's expenditure on city farms in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) at the latest available date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None. Government funding is provided primarily by the Home Office.

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what computer systems her Department have brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Jack: Expenditure on computer capital projects over the last five years is as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	7·6
1990-91	9·9
1991-92	9·2
1993-94	15·6

The Department employs computer facilities for a wide variety of functions in support of its many business needs and I cannot provide full details without disproportionate cost. However, the most significant computer projects, in terms of cost and value to the Department have been the systems to support the implementation of common agricultural policy reform measures, a resource management strategy, the introduction of office systems to head quarters offices and the provison of central bureau facilities in support of a range of applications across the Department.

City Farms

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many city farms there were in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) at the latest available date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In 1991 and 1992, there were 63 city farms. A further six farms are expected to be established soon.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Armstrong: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on her Department's actions with respect to the arrival of cull milking ewes at Poole, Dorset, on 22 March.

Mr. Soames: This consignment of ewes originating in Spain was intercepted by the Ministry at Poole on 22 March and accompanied to a lairage at Southampton where the sheep were unloaded and detained for resting, feeding and watering and for veterinary examination. At unloading, the veterinary officer found one sheep dead and euthanased three more found recumbent. Another ewe was found to have lambed. The consignment was held overnight pending veterinary examination on the following day, by which time a second sheep had lambed. The veterinary examination carried out on 23 March disclosed a further 26 sheep unfit to continue their journey and these, together with the ewes which had lambed and the new-born lambs, were humanely destroyed. The remaining sheep, passed fit for transport, were consigned to their final destination in Birmingham.

Ministry veterinary officers have made statements to the local authority, which will be considering prosecution for possible contraventions of the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1992.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place in the European Union on limiting the journey time for transport of animals for slaughter.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 24 March 1994 at col. 370.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has on the numbers of animals which will be imported for slaughter during the next 12 months.

Mr. Soames: Such information is not available.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to reinstate veterinary checks of animals at ports of arrival within the United Kingdom until all member states reach a common high standard.

Mr. Soames: EC rules prohibit the re-introduction of regular, systematic veterinary checks at internal borders, including at ports of entry, on animals traded between member states. In Great Britain, the State Veterinary Service (SVS) continues to conduct random and suspicion-based health and welfare checks on such animals at ports of arrival and regularly undertakes blanket surveillance, for 24-hour periods, at all south and east coast ports, covering both imports and exports of animals. In addition, the SVS continues to conduct a significant level of veterinary checks at premises of destination on animals imported from other member states.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she last met the Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers to discuss the export of live animals for slaughter.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend the Minister has met the Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers on a number of occasions but she has not discussed the export of live animals with the federation. Ministry officials also meet representatives of the federation regularly and discussions about the welfare of exported animals took place on 28 February 1994.

Animal Welfare at Markets

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how she is monitoring the enforcement of the Welfare of Animals in Markets Order 1990; and what information she has on prosecutions brought under this legislation by each relevant local authority.

Mr. Soames: Veterinary officers and other Ministry staff visit markets regularly in the course of their duties which include providing advice and assistance to local authorities with responsibility for enforcement of the Welfare of Animals at Markets Order 1990.

Details of prosecutions are included in the "Return of Expenditure Incurred and Proceedings Taken under the Animal Health Act 1981, and Incidence of Disease in Imported Animals for the year 1993" which was laid before Parliament last month. The return shows that 28 prosecutions were taken for offences under the order in question.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals in regard to environmental protection she put to the European Fisheries Council on 12 April; and if she will make a statement on matters discussed and decisions taken at the Council meeting.

Mr. Jack: I reported the outcome of the 12 April Fisheries Council in my reply of 13 April to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 13 April at col. 183-84. In a discussion on drift netting in the Council I stressed both the need to take environmental and ecological implications fully into account and my determination to oppose reintroduction of any derogation for drift nets longer than 2·5 km.

Gambia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements exist between the Government of Gambia and the European Union relating to access to the continental shelf and the coastal waters of the Gambia for fishing vessels from European Union member states.

Mr. Jack: A new protocol to the EU-Gambia fishing agreement, setting out the technical and financial terms governing fishing by European Union vessels in all Gambian waters for the period of 1 July 1993 to 30 June 1996, was adopted by the Council on 10 March 1994.

The protocol provides for licensing of 23 tuna freezer seiners and seven pole and line tuna vessels. Additionally, there are opportunities for fresh fish trawlers up to a capacity of 410 gross registered tonnes, freezer trawlers fishing for shrimps up to a capacity of 2000 gross registered tonnes and other freezer trawlers up to a capacity of 750 gross registered tonnes.

Warble Fly

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will initiate research into health risks associated with dressings used for warble fly; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Any potential human health risks from the use of veterinary medicines are fully assessed with applications for product licences are considered against the scientific criteria of safety, quality and efficacy laid down in EC and United Kingdom legislation. Provided that the label instructions are properly followed, the use of licensed warble fly treatments should pose no risk to human health.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to make available to farmers application forms for certificates of competence for the use of organo-phosphorous sheep dips; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Sheep farmers were sent a letter and application form last month inviting them to enrol with an agent of the National Proficiency Tests Council, for taking a test for a certificate of competence in the safe use of sheep dips. NPTC agents are sending certificates of enrolment, which are now necessary to support any purchases of organo-phosphorous sheep dips, to those who apply. During the coming months, NPTC agents will be arranging tests for the certificate of competence itself. The latter certificate is not necessary to support purchases of organo-phosphorus sheep dip until 1 April 1995.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will initiate research into the possibility of a connection between the use of organo-phosphorous sheep dips and depressive illness; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Whether or not such research will be initiated will depend on recommendations from the medical panel, which was set up last month as a sub-committee of the Veterinary Products Committee to look into claims of long-term health effects, and to advise on research.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will make a statement on the future of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food veterinary service;

(2) what plans she has to privatise the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Veterinary Service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend expects to consult interested parties on possible changes to the State Veterinary Service within the next few weeks.

Overgrazing

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is taken to restore the land concerned where overgrazing is found to occur in connection with the amended hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme.

Mr. Jack: The provisions of the current hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme are aimed at preventing further environmental damage rather than restoration of the vegetation.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment her Ministry has made of the measures introduced to prevent overgrazing in connection with the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: It is too early to assess the impact of the measures aimed at preventing overgrazing introduced under the current hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what involvement English Nature has had in operating the measures introduced to prevent overgrazing under the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: English Nature and other environmental and farming interests were consulted about the introduction of these measures.

Fish Quotas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which quotas have been transferred from the Northern Ireland Fish Producers Organisation to the Fife Fish Producers Organisation since Christmas 1993; and under which qualifying rules transfers have been made.

Mr. Jack: None. The allocations of fish quotas to producer organisations for a particular year are based on the track records of vessels over 10m in overall length in their membership at 1 January, in accordance with the rules for the management of fish quotas drawn up in consultation with the industry each year. The rules for vessels joining or leaving a particular producer organisation are a matter for the group concerned.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many warheads constitute a strategic strike compared with a sub-strategic strike.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, on 23 March, Official Report, column 290.

Mines

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what tests Her Majesty's Government have carried out on the safety and reliability of self-destructing and self-neutralising mines; if he will publish the results; and what plans there are for further tests;

(2) if he will make a statement on the failure rate of self-neutralising and self-destructing mines.

Mr. Aitken: No self-destructing or self-neutralising mines are in service with the armed forces and no specific tests have been carried out by my Department into the safety and reliability of such mines. Consequently no data are available regarding failure rates. We do have plans to introduce mines with these capabilities and acceptable levels of safety and reliability will have to be demonstrated as part of the procurement process. Any such weapon would, of course, fully comply with the international laws of armed conflict.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received that symptoms of Gulf war syndrome have affected the spouses and children of those who served in the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received representations relating to seven cases where it is alleged that there may be some linkage between service in the Gulf and subsequent medical problems among spouses or children of service personnel.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the amount of money earmarked on the service children boarding school allowance scheme in Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Hanley: Information on the location of schools attended by the children of service parents claiming boarding school allowance is not compiled annually. The most recent available information is for 1992, when the average boarding school allowance paid per service child was £7,117. From this it is estimated that some £2,850,000 was paid to claimants whose children attended schools in Wales. Information for previous years is not available.

Fraud

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what how many (a) Ministry of Defence civilian personnel, and (b) service personnel have (i) been charged and (ii) been found guilty of fraud in the last 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been lost to his Department through fraud in the financial years (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 11 January, Official Report, column 172. My Department expects the highest standards of personal honesty and integrity from its employees, and is taking steps to increase awareness and to counter the incidence of fraud in the workplace.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who are the members currently appointed to the nuclear powered warships safety committee;

(2) who are the members currently appointed to the nuclear weapons safety committee;

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: Membership of the nuclear weapons safety committee and nuclear powered warships safety committee is made up of serving officers of the armed forces, senior civil servants and a number of independent specialists drawn from industry and the academic world. For security reasons it is not our practice to reveal names of individual members serving on these committees.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the board of the National Army museum.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Field Marshal Sir Peter Inge
General Sir George Cooper
Mrs. Sara Jones
Rt. Revd. Michael Mann
Richard Marriott
Hon. David McAlpine
The Duke of Westminster

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the Royal Military college of science advisory council.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

The Lord Gregson AMCT CBIM DL (Chairman)
Professor Sir Roger Elliott DSc MA DPhil FRS
Professor Sir John Cadogan CBE FRS
Professor J. H. Westcott DSc FRS FEng
Dr. A. A. Wells OBE FRS FEng.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the Royal College of Defence Studies advisory board.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Lord Bridges GCMG
Professor Sir John Cadogan CBE FRS
Professor Lawrence Freedman
Sir John Graham Bt GCMG
Sir James Hamilton KCB MBE
Sir Richard Lloyd Bt

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Witnesses

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which courts in Staffordshire have child liaison officers to protect child witnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is a designated child liaison officer for every Crown court centre, including the combined court centres at Stafford and Stoke-on-Trent.

Judges

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the expenditure on salaries of all (a) full-time district judges and (b) part-time district judges in the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: During the 1993-94 financial year, the total amount paid to full-time district judges was £18,427,591. The figure for part-time district judges is not yet available for the whole financial year, but for the 11-month period from April 1993 to February 1994, the fees amounted to £4,870,627.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the planned increase for the years 1994, 1995 and 1996 in (a) full-time district judges and (b) part-time district judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of full-time district judges in post on 1 March 1994 was 289. The planned number of full-time district judges for the three forthcoming financial years is:

	Number
1994-95	305
1995-96	309
1996-97	314

There are no plans to increase the number of deputy district judges from the present level of 750.

Small Claims Court

Mr. Mans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many leaflets his Department distributed in 1993 explaining the processes of the small claims courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A series of seven leaflets explains the small claims procedure in county courts. The total number distributed in 1993 was approximately 1·5 million. The leaflets are distributed by Her Majesty's Stationery Office to court offices, trading standards offices, citizens advice bureaux and other advice agencies.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many actions were commenced through the small claims court in each year from 1990.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The term "small claims court" refers to the arbitration procedure in the county court. The number of arbitrations heard—which mainly, but not exclusively, consist of cases below the small claims limit—in England and Wales since 1990 were:

	Number
1990	52,360
1991	[1]61,919
1992	80,341
1993	105,843

[1] On 1 July 1991 the maximum sum claimable through the small claims procedure increased from £500 to £1,000.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 275, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department in each of the last five years and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Firms of consultants employed in 1992-93 on projects costing more than £20,000 and the number of contracts that they undertook were as follows:

Consultants	Number of Contracts
Price Waterhouse	6
Grasshopper Computers Ltd.	3
TRIAD Special Systems Ltd.	1
WS Atkins	2
KPMG	2
Coopers & Lybrand	2
Ernst & Young	2
University of Westminster	1
PE International	1
Compucare	1
Baz Services Ltd.	1
LBMS	1
Comshare	1
CSC	1
Aims Systems	1
Sapphire Consultancy Services	1
Clark Whitehill	1
Enviroplan	1
Benford Associates	1
Clarkson Goff Management	1
John Garnett	1

There were also some 70 projects each costing less than £20,000 in 1992-93. As I said in my answer of 23 March, comparable information for earlier years is not available.

Lawyers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current number of (a) Queen's Counsel and (b) barristers; and how many of each are (i) women and (ii) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not have statistics on practitioners in the legal profession. However, I am informed by the Bar Council that as at 1 October 1993 there were 7,735 practising barristers, of whom 1,593 were women. At the same date there were 797 practising Queen's Counsel, of whom 41 were women. I am also informed by the Bar Council that of a total of 7,660 practising barristers on 6 September 1993, 347 had declared a non-white ethnic origin. Of these, nine were Queen's Counsel. Seventy-seven new practising Queen's Counsel have been appointed this year. Of these, nine were women and one was of non-white ethnic origin.

Advice Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the Government's policy towards the provision of a network of independent advice and law centres throughout the country; and what response he has made to the Advice 2000 initiative launched by the Advice Services Alliance.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's objectives for legal aid and the Legal Aid Board make it clear that he wishes to encourage law centres, citizens advice bureaux and others to take on an increasing proportion of work which it is appropriate for them to handle. The Legal Aid Board is currently undertaking two projects: the first is designed to ascertain whether methods of delivering legal services other than on a case-by-case basis would have benefits and the second to enable the board to set standards applicable to non-solicitor agencies. Information from these projects should assist consideration of how to achieve the above objective.

TREASURY

Taxes Management Act 1970

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to consult interested parties regarding any future amendment of section 20A of the Taxes Management Act 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue is at present consulting the accountancy and legal professions over its draft guidance notes on the use of section 20A. The Government will be considering how to take the matter forward in the light of any responses to the draft guidance notes and the points made in Committee.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultation and preparation work is being carried on by which European Union institutions, committees and organisations about monetary union, the reconstruction of the exchange rate mechanism, the restoration of the coinage clearing systems and the institutional arrangements for monetary union; what part Britain is playing in both of these processes and organisations; how many British officials and committees are working on this issue (a) in the EU structures and (b) domestically; and what consultations are being held with British banks and financial institutions by EU officials and his own officials about monetary union.

Mr. Nelson: Monetary co-operation in the European Union is regularly discussed by the Council of the European Monetary Institute, the Monetary Committee and the Council of Finance Ministers. In all those forums, the United Kingdom plays a full and constructive part.

The Commission has announced its intention of setting up a study group of independent experts to advise on some of the practical issues which would arise on implementation of a single currency.

A number of United Kingdom and Bank of England officials are concerned with European monetary issues. The Government and the bank are represented on the Monetary Committee; the bank is represented on the EMI council.

British banks and financial institutions are also consulted as necessary by both British and Commission officials.

There have never been EC coinage clearing systems, so the question of their restoration does not arise.

Customs and Excise (Cheques)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the practice of Customs and Excise in respect of sending large denomination cheques through the post;

(2) what security procedures are adopted to protect cheques sent by post by Customs and Excise.

Sir John Cope: Customs continually encourages businesses to provide it with bank account details so that repayments can be electronically transferred. However, not all traders yet take advantage of that facility and almost 1 million payable orders, with a total value in excess of £7 billion, are issued each year by first-class post.

In conjunction with Her Majesty's Treasury, customs has been taking steps to increase even further the security measures for payable orders. These include higher levels of security printing so as to make alteration of the payee's name more difficult.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement regarding the repayment of £1 million to the London borough of Haringey by Customs and Excise;

(2) what steps are being taken by Customs and Excise to recover £1 million misappropriated en route to the London borough of Haringey.

Sir John Cope: The payment of £1 million to Haringey borough council was in respect of a claim by it for a lost payable order of £1,156,806·10, plus interest and repayment supplement. Settlement of the claim was made on the basis of advice from counsel and the full agreement of the parties involved.

Inquiries into the case, by the police and customs, are still continuing.

Petrol

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total excise and revenue raised from petrol sales in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: Information on the excise duty and VAT revenue raised from petrol sales in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93 is provided in the table:

£ billion

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Excise duty	7·0	8·0	8·2
VAT (estimated)	1·3	1·5	1·6
Total tax revenue	8·3	9·6	9·7

Note: Components do not necessarilyt sum to the total due to rounding.

No direct figures are available for the VAT raised on petrol. An estimate has been made using national accounts data; it covers only consumers' expenditure—the yield from business is highly uncertain because the majority of businesses can reclaim the VAT paid as in-put tax.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total income to the Treasury from value added tax on petrol in 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: The total income to the Treasury from value added tax on petrol in 1992-93 is estimated at £1·6 billion.

No direct figures are available for the VAT raised on petrol. An estimate has been made using national accounts data; it covers only consumers' expenditure—the yield from business is highly uncertain because the majority of businesses can reclaim the VAT paid as in-put tax.

Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the effect of pre-payment by large-scale gas and electricity users to avoid value added tax on domestic fuel from 1 April; and what assessment he has made of the scheme of pre-payment and its effect on (a) the revenue expected from the tax and (b) the level of savings held in building societies.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 13 April, Official Report, column 171.

Child Maintenance

Dr. Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact the recent tax changes will have on the Child Support Agency assessments for child maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: To the extent that they affect the net incomes of absent parents, the recent direct tax changes will alter the assessments.

Pensioner Certificates

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he will take to ensure that the age limit is reduced from 65 years to 60 years for women to be able to invest in pensioner certificates.

Mr. Nelson: There are no plans to change the present age limit for purchase of the National Savings pensioners guaranteed income bond.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what key targets have been set for the Central Statistical Office for 1994-95.

Mr. Nelson: The Central Statistical Office's key targets for 1994-95 are set out in the "CSO Programme Strategies 1994-97", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. As before, the targets cover the timeliness of published statistics, the size of revisions, the coherence of key economic statistics, the response rates for statistical inquiries, action to minimise the load on respondents, response times to public requests for information and the CSO's running costs, efficiency improvements and receipts. A number of the targets have been tightened for 1994-95 in recognition of the continuing improvements in the CSO's performance.

Council Tax

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many domestic properties in England and Wales have been re-banded on sale and repurchase; and, of these, how many have had their banding increased and how many decreased.

Mr. Nelson: The Valuation Office Agency does not keep a record of how many bandings are increased or decreased in England and Wales as a result of a sale.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what criteria are used to decide the rebanding of domestic properties on sale and repurchase;

(2) what steps are taken by the Inland Revenue to review the banding for council tax purposes on the sale and repurchase of domestic properties.

Mr. Nelson: A listing officer is required to alter the banding of a property following the sale or other relevant transaction if the banding does not reflect the value added by improvements carried out by the previous taxpayer. Otherwise, the listing officer will review a banding following sale of the property only if the sale price is significantly different from the figure that would reasonably have been expected at that date for a property with that banding. In such cases, he will consider all the evidence available to him of the value of the property as at the valuation date of 1 April 1991, including any relevant sale prices at or around that date, in order to establish whether there is any inaccuracy that requires to be remedied.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to reband other similar properties in the same area where a property is rebanded for council tax purposes on sale and repurchase.

Mr. Nelson: Where a property is reviewed and rebanded following a sale or other relevant transaction because the band does not reflect the value of the improvements carried out by the previous taxpayer, the banding of other similar properties in the locality is not reviewed. Where a property is reviewed and rebanded following a sale which indicates that the original entry in the compiled valuation list was incorrect and the listing officer is aware that similar properties in the locality may be incorrect, the banding of those properties is reviewed.

Tiger Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 640, if he will give details of the countries of origin of the tiger products seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and in each case what was the ultimate destination of the products.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 April 1994]: It is not always possible to determine the origin—as opposed to country of consignment—of goods, but the following additional information may be of help in connection with the seized tiger derivatives listed in my previous answer:

Item	Country of consignment
Handbag	Australia
Skin (whole and piece); two claws	India
Pair of shoes	Saudi Arabia
50 boxes pills; 12 packets plasters	Hong Kong
20 packets plasters	USA

Item	Country of origin
All other goods	China

In all cases customs seized the goods; there is no information on their inteaded ultimate destination other than the declared United Kingdom address of the importer.

Trading Profits (Midlands)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of change in profit margins has been reported in (a) the west midlands and (b) Coventry in each quarter since April 1991.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Information on profit margins is not available but gross trading profits in the west midlands standard region are estimated at £4,903 million in 1991 and £5,266 million in 1992. No estimates have yet been made for 1993. There are no quarterly estimates and none for Coventry separately.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tobacco (Sponsorship)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the amount spent in each year since 1985, by tobacco manufacturing companies on sponsorship of each sport, under the terms of the voluntary agreement.

Mr. Brooke: Records are not kept of the amount of sponsorship money spent on each individual sport. The voluntary agreement on sponsorship requires tobacco manufacturers represented on the Tobacco Advisory Council to inform the Government of the expenditure incurred each year on sports sponsorship in the United Kingdom. These amounts are as follows:

Year	£
1985-86	8,252,000
1986-87	7,699,000
1987-88	5,911,000
1988-89	5,329,000
1989-90	7,253,000
1990-91	7,630,000
1991-92	8,981,000

Broadcasting Directive

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he was notified by the European Community Commission of its intention to take the United Kingdom to court over the broadcasting directive; and what particular issue is being pursued.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 18 April 1994]: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 13 April, Official Report, column 190. I was informed on 23 March by the United Kingdom's representative in Brussels, though I have yet to receive a formal communication from the Commission.

All-seater Stadiums

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to announce changes in the proposals for all-seater stadiums to be installed at premier league and first division football clubs before the end of 1994.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 April 1994]: I have no such plans. The 1 August deadline for all-seating at premier league and first division clubs remains unchanged.

EDUCATION

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Boswell: The number of answers given to parliamentary questions by the Department for Education —and the Department of Education and Science prior to April 1992—between January 1987 and December 1993 recorded in the POLIS database as including a reference to part or all of the information being available only at disproportionate cost was 260. Details of each of these questions can be obtained from the POLIS database, access to which is available in the Library. The further information requested is not currently available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Grant-maintained Status

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of the GM pack, "Going GM", including, "How to become a GM School", "Experiences During the First Year", "Questions Parents Ask", "Questions Staff Ask" and "Funding Worksheet", have been sent to school heads and governors; and what is the total cost of the information sent, including postage costs.

Mr. Robin Squire: A composite Department for Education information pack on grant-maintained status was first issued in September 1992. Its contents have varied a little for particular purposes over time. Numbers issued fall into the following categories:

a. circulation of updated publications following the Education Act 1993, to chairmen of governors of all maintained schools in December 1993 (22,531 copies at a total cost of some £63,000, including also DFE Circular 18/93 "Grant-Maintained Schools: Acquisition, Transfer and Governance");
b. accompanying invitations to attend the Department's regional "Going GM" conferences, sent to headteachers and chairmen of governors in batches between September 1992 and December 1993 (57,092 copies at an estimated total cost of some £127,000). A further mailing has taken place within the last week of 10,118 invitations with packs; figures on the cost of this mailing are not available yet;
c. in response to requests, some of which were from headteachers and governors, between September 1992 and December 1993 (approximately 78,000 copies at an estimated cost of £110,000, exclusive of postage). Since January 1994 the contents of the individual packs have been specifically tailored to the needs of individual enquirers.

Cost estimates reflect the variation in pack contents over time.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total cost of each of the "Going GM" conferences held in Darlington on 3 February, Manchester on 18 February, Newcastle on 4 March and Huddersfield on 14 March; how many school heads and how many governors attended each conference; how many speakers were paid by the Department; and how many civil servants attended in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: The numbers attending and the costs of the Darlington, Manchester, Newcastle and Huddersfield "Going GM" conferences are set out in the table:

Conference	Cost[1][2] £	Delegates[3]	Civil servants[4]
Darlington	13,335	94	25
Manchester	15,697	114	10
Newcastle	14,131	77	13
Huddersfield	15,151	102	10

[1] Includes venue hire and catering, equipment costs, and pro rata conference support costs (secretariat, production, and conference management), and expenses payments to GM headteachers who spoke at the conferences and who have submitted an expenses claim.
[2] Does not include the cost of mailing invitations for these conferences, or related travel and subsistence costs for civil servants.
[3] The Department's records do not identify separately headteachers and governors attending "Going GM" conferences.
[4] Attendance at a "Going GM" conference is often part of the induction process for Department officials new to grant-maintained schools policy. In particular, most of the civil servants at the Darlington conference were observers.

Each conference was also attended by six head teachers from grant-maintained schools who spoke about their experiences in the GM sector. The Department reimburses head teachers for expenses incurred in speaking at "Going GM" conferences, but does not pay them a fee. To date, the Department has made payments totalling £857 in response to expenses claims from GM head teachers for the four conferences listed. These payments are included in the table.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his estimate of the cost of the freephone calls in response to the recent advertisements in the national press on GM status and his most recent figure of the number of calls received.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, more than 1,100 of the responses to the advertising campaign were calls to the freephone number. To disaggregate the cost of these calls from that of other calls received by the Department's GM publications centre would involve disproportionate expense.

Nursery Education

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of children in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) the USA have nursery places provided by (i) the Government sector and (ii) the non profit-making private sector.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information is not centrally available in the form requested. The table below shows the latest available information on combined public and private participation rates in pre-compulsory schooling. Separate participation rates are not available. There are also some differences between countries in the distinction drawn between education and day care. If the United Kingdom figures are defined to include nursery schools, nursery classes, infant classes, pre-school play groups and group day care, the participation rates for both three to four and three to five-year-olds increase to over 90 per cent.

Participation in Pre-primary Education (Full and Part-time) by age group, 1991

	Percentage of age group
	Age at which Compulsory schooling starts	Education		Percentage of preprimary provision which is within the private sector [1]1991
		3 to 5	3 to 4
France	6	100	100	12
Germany	6	63	53	[2][3]67
United Kingdom[4]	5	68	52	6
		[5]68	[5]53
United States of America	[6]6-8	60	45	[7]37

[1] 1990 for Germany and 1989 for United States of America.
[2] In Germany, some providers of private sector provision receive some public subsidy.
[3] Participation rates of those in school at start of calendar year with ages at that point.
[4] Age 3 includes some children age 2.
[5] 1992 data.
[6] Varies between states.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his latest estimate of the average cost per surplus pupil place in respect of (a) a secondary pupil and (b) a primary pupil.

Mr. Forth: The average premises-related cost of maintaining a school place is estimated at £179 a year for a primary school place and £298 a year for a secondary school place at 1994-95 prices. The actual cost and the scope for realising savings from removal of surplus places in practice will depend on local circumstances.

Parental Choice

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the figures, in total and for each local education authority, on the number of parents who secured the primary or secondary school of their first choice for their child for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Robin Squire: Data on the number of parents securing their first choice of school are not collected centrally. However, the most recent evidence—from surveys commissioned by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in 1992 and The Times in 1993—shows that some 90 per cent. of parents gain a place at their first choice of secondary school.

Hanover Insurance Brokers

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what payments his Department has made, either directly or indirectly, to Hanover Insurance Brokers for their work in advising grant-maintained schools on issues concerning insurance.

Mr. Robin Squire: Hanover Insurance Brokers is one of a number of companies that advise grant-maintained schools on their insurance requirements. The Department has made no direct payment to Hanover Insurance Brokers in respect of this work. Arrangements for paying brokers in respect of advice on insurance is a matter for individual grant-maintained schools.

Grant-maintained Schools Foundation

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education who are the directors of the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation Ltd; who has been appointed as chief executive; and what was the Department's involvement in the appointments.

Mr. Robin Squire: The directors of the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation Ltd. are Sir Robert Balchin, chairman, Mr. John Spiers, Sir Christopher Lawson, Mr. David Allan, OBE, Mr. Lawrence Norcross, OBE and Mr. Thomas Savage. The company's chief executive is Mr. Andrew Turner. The Department was not involved in the appointment of the directors or the chief executive.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much grant aid the new Grant-maintained Schools Foundation Ltd. has applied for in 1994-95; and what level of grant has been granted.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation Ltd. is currently in discussion with the Department about grant aid for 1994-95. Decisions on the total level of grant have yet to be taken.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to investigate the potential conflict of interests arising from other chairmanships held by the chairman of the Funding Agency for Schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. I do not accept that any conflicts arise. It will be for the funding agency to keep a register of chairman's and members' interests and for individual members to disclose any private interest in a matter to be considered by the board in the normal way.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Applications

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the last 10 years he has used powers to call in planning applications after they have been approved by local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Water Quality Objectives

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce the system of statutory water quality objectives under the Water Resources Act 1991.

Mr. Atkins: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales and I have today laid before Parliament the Surface Waters (River Ecosystem) (Classification) Regulations 1994. These regulations, together with an accompanying document specifying procedures to be used by the National Rivers Authority, prescribe for the first time a statutory system for classifying the overall quality of rivers in England and Wales. This builds on the previous informal river classification system, and follows extensive consultations. The regulations will allow the process of introductory statutory water quality objectives to begin.

Water quality objectives will provide a stable framework for the NRA to maintain and, where appropriate, improve river quality; they will build on the major programmes of investment that are already planned or under way. My hon. Friend and I will, after advice from the NRA, consult on proposals for the first water quality objectives to be set on the basis on these regulations.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Advisory Committee on Human Genome Research

Mr. Faber: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the Advisory Committee on Human Genome Research.

Mr. Waldegrave: I established an Advisory Committee on Human Genome Research, early last year, to advise me on how best to build on the existing strengths of United Kingdom human genome research and secure the benefits it promises for human welfare, health care and United Kingdom industry.

The committee convened an independent expert working group of leading geneticists, to review the area and identify priorities for investment in the United Kingdom to benefit both basic science and commercial opportunities. Its report, "The Human Genome Mapping Project—Priorities and Opportunities in Genome Research", was published this morning. I believe that it will be of interest to all those concerned with genome research in the United Kingdom. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 1018, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

Mr. David Davis: The information requested is not held centrally and is available only at disproportionate cost.

Research Establishments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total amount of spending in 1993 in Wales by the Natural Environment Research Council in pounds million at 1994-95 prices net of spending on the research vessels services in Barry and the British geological survey, Aberystwyth, together with the corresponding percentage spending by the Natural Environment Research Council in Wales as a proportion of spending the United Kingdom net of spending on the above two establishments.

Mr. David Davis: The estimated expenditure by the Natural Environment Research Council in Wales in 1993-94 was £3·4 million at 1994-95 prices, net of the research vessel services at Barry, and the British geological survey's district office at Aberystwyth. This amounts to approximately 2 per cent. of the NERC's total United Kingdom spend.

PRIME MINISTER

European Union (Qualified Majority Voting)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now seek written confirmation, by means of an exchange of letters, of the undertakings he announced in his oral statement of 29 March, Official Report, columns 797-98, and place copies in the Library.

The Prime Minister: I see no need for this, in the light of the undertakings given.

Parliamentary Counsel Office Staff

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how many people, of what grade, are employed by the Office of the Parliamentary Counsel.

The Prime Minister: The number of staff and their grades currently employed in the Office of the Parliamentary Counsel, excluding those on loan to the Law Commission and the Home Office, is:

	Number
First Parliamentary Counsel (grade 1)	1
Second Parliamentary Counsel (grade 2)	1
Parliamentary Counsel (grade 2)	8
Deputy Parliamentary Counsel (grade 3)	3
Senior Assistant Parliamentary Counsel (grade 5)	3
Assistant Parliamentary Counsel (grade 7)	12
Grade 7	1
Executive Officer	1
Senior Personal Secretary	7
Administrative Officer	5
Support grade band 2	2
Total	44

The following Parliamentary Counsel Office staff are on loan to the Law Commission:

	Number
Parliamentary Counsel (grade 2)	1
Deputy Parliamentary Counsel (grade 3)	1
Principal Assistant Parliamentary Counsel (grade 4)	1
Senior Assistant Parliamentary Counsel (grade 5)	1
Assistant Parliamentary Counsel (grade 7)	1
Total	5

The following Parliamentary Counsel Office staff are on loan to the Home Office:

	Number
Assistant Parliamentary Counsel (grade 7)	1
Total	1

Stephan Adolphus Kock (Duties)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister what official duties have been carried out by Stephan Adolphus Kock since 1979.

The Prime Minister: None.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 19 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fire Safety Scrutiny Initiative

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the organisations and individuals who have submitted evidence to the interdepartmental fire safety scrutiny initiative; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for the review.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The team conducting the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement has consulted widely among more than 100 organisations with a known interest in the subject. These have included, inter alia, representatives of fire service bodies, the insurance industry, fire and other safety organisations, the Confederation of British Industry and groups representing small businesses, organisations representing retail, manufacturing and other business interests, consumer bodies, organisations representing property interests, fire equipment manufacturers, groups representing the disabled, local authorities, unions, the construction industry, surveyors, building control officers, architects and planners.

Many such organisations have responded by supplying written evidence and some have also met the review team. Evidence has also been received from a number of individuals interested in this important matter.

The review team are still receiving representations. They will include the final list of all those who submitted evidence in their report to Ministers which is due before the end of May. We will then need to consider their recommendations and any changes that they may propose. The Government are committed to consulting all interested parties before making any legislative changes.

Deregulation Task Forces

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the reports of the eight deregulation task forces will be deposited in the Library.

Mr. Nell Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 30 March 1994, Official Report, column 766, which stated that the working papers of the seven business task forces were placed in the Library of the House on 30 March.

The eighth task force, which is looking at legislation affecting charities and voluntary organisations, has now completed its work and is due to report shortly.

Aluminium

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding dumping of aluminium from the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Needham: None.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the imports of aluminium have been from the former Soviet Union in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is provided in the table:

Imports of Aluminium from the former Soviet Union

Year	Volume (Metric Tonnes)	Value (£000's)
1990	4,552	4,297
1991	22,387	16,981
1992	17,355	11,291
1993	229,305	180,432

Notes:
Aluminium is classified as heading 684 of the Standard International Trade Classification.
The former Soviet Union comprises Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Ukraine, Belarus, Moldova, Russia, Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan.

Regional Challenge

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, columns 647-49, if he will consider making it a duty for authorities to consult local communities for the purposes of regional challenge; if he will publish rules indicating that the consultation should enable local communities to have an impact on decisions; and if he will ensure that the rules of this new competition do not allow for unnecessary competition between deprived communities.

Mr. Salisbury: I have nothing to add to my reply of 29 March.

Coal Industry Privatisation

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will be responsible for consumer protection and safety in respect of domestic coal consumers when the Domestic Coal Consumers Council ceases to exist after Royal Assent is given to the Coal Industry Bill.

Mr. Eggar: A substantial body of general consumer protection legislation will continue to apply to coal as well as to other products. Discussions are taking place in the coal trade on voluntary complementary arrangements following the privatisation of British Coal. The Domestic Coal Consumers Council is an advisory body. No date has been set for its abolition, although the Coal Industry Bill provides for that in due course.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has in respect of (a) "Complete Heat" and (b) British Coal domestic consumers database after the Coal Industry Bill receives Royal Assent.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions on the future of "Complete Heat" and British Coal's database of domestic consumers are a matter for the Corporation.

TRANSPORT

Sea (Safety)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the ratification of the 1988 protocol to the 1974 international convention on the safety of life at sea.

Mr. Norris: The 1988 protocol to the 1974 international convention on the safety of life at sea will be ratified upon completion of the work in consolidating the Merchant Shipping Acts. This is scheduled for later this year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many holders of his office have had advice from the Landscape Advisory Committee since 1964.

Mr. Key: All.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he no longer needs advice from the Landscape Advisory Committee.

Mr. Key: The reasons are given in paragraph 8.11 of "Trunk Roads in England: 1994 Review", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the advice and publications from the Landscape Advisory Committee in the past 10 years.

Mr. Key: Copies of each of the committee's annual reports were placed in the Library. The reports list the schemes on which the committee has advised.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he decided to abolish the Landscape Advisory Committee;

(2) when he first (a) considered abolition of and (b) made known his intention to abolish the Landscape Advisory Committee.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend and I considered the future of the Landscape Advisory Committee as part of the Government's review of the road programme, announced in August 1993. My right hon. Friend announced the results of the review on 30 March 1994.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he advised the Select Committee for Transport on his proposal to abolish the Landscape Advisory Committee.

Mr. Key: The decision to disband the Landscape Advisory Committee was announced in "Trunk Roads in England: 1994 Review", published on 30 March 1994. My right hon. Friend wrote to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Transport drawing his attention to that document on the day of publication.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who have been the members of the Landscape Advisory Committee since 1964.

Mr. Key: A list of members since 1970 is set out in alphabetical order. Information on members between 1964 and 1969, if available, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of the Landscape Advisory Committee in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Key: Over the last 10 years, expenditure incurred by Landscape Advisory Committee members on travel, subsistence and accommodation in connection with Committee meetings and site visits has been as follows:

Year	Cost (£)
1984-85	17,532
1985-86	21,520
1986-87	19,475
1987-88	19,810
1988-89	18,555
1989-90	28,974
1990-91	52,062
1991-92	47,155
1992-93	53,898
1993-94	48,593

In addition, the Committee was supported throughout this period by a secretariat consisting of two full-time staff whose costs including salaries and accommodation amounted to around £60,000 in 1993-94. Substantial costs were also incurred by officials and consultants attending meetings and site visits and preparing briefing material. These costs are not held centrally.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the three rolling stock companies will tell passenger railway service operators how much they will be charged for using their rolling stock in the current financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The timing of this is a matter for the British Rail board. I understand from British Rail that the rolling stock companies intend to issue indicative prices within the next two or three weeks.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the terms of the shadow franchise agreements for the six railway shadow franchises which came into operation on 1 April will be finalised; and whether the terms of the agreements including the minimum service specification and the performance standards will be made public.

Mr. Freeman: It is the franchising director's intention to finalise the details of the shadow franchise agreements for the first six franchises within the next few months. These will be made public except in so far as that might damage the commercial interest of the businesses concerned.

Cyclists (Protective Headgear)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the possibility of requiring all cyclists to wear protective headgear on public roads.

Mr. Key: The benefits of cycle helmets are well established, particularly for children and young adults who are most at risk of injury when cycling. Research shows that good standard cycle helmets reduce the chance of head injury by 85 per cent. and brain injury by 88 per cent. We actively promote helmet wearing but are not minded to regulate to make it a criminal offence to ride a bicycle without a helmet.

Road Bridge Repairs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of (a) his Department's annual spending on and (b) the annual grant to local authorities for repairs to road bridges for each year since 1985 and in each of the years of the current public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Key: The figures are:

Year	Department of transport capital expenditure on trunk road structures £ million	Local authority expenditure accepted for transport supplementary grant (TSG) £ million
1985-86	7	—
1986-87	37	—
1987-88	51	—
1988-89	31	—
1989-90	66	—
1990-91	87	—
1991-92	120	91
1992-93	116	111
1993-94	129	137
1994-95	150	137
1995-96	155	—
1996-97	155	—

Notes:

1. Department of Transport Expenditure on Trunk Road Structures:
   a. figures up to and including 1992-93 are actual outturn expenditure;
   b. the figure for 1993-94 is estimated outturn expenditure;
   c. figures for 1994-95 onwards are planned expenditure by the Highways Agency.
2. Local Authority expenditure accepted for TSG:
   a. grant is paid at a rate of 50% of accepted expenditure;
   b. resources for local authority bridge maintenance were transferred from Revenue Support Grant (RSG—paid by DOE) to TSG in 1991-92. The Department of Transport has no details of allocations to local authorities for this purpose in earlier years;
   c. levels of support for bridges for 1995-96 onwards have not yet been determined.

Bus Companies

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to require local authorities to divest their interests in bus companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is our policy that all the remaining local authority-owned bus companies should be transferred to the private sector. We have been encouraging their voluntary sale. I am pleased that 28, including most recently Greater Manchester Buses, have already been sold. Measures to require the sale of local authority bus companies will be introduced when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

Airspace

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many unauthorised penetrations of controlled or regulated airspace were reported in each year since 1988; and what proportion of the number in each year were by military aircraft.

Mr. Norris: As this is a matter within the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, I am asking the chairman of the CAA to write to the hon. Member.

School Minibuses (Accidents)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children have been killed or injured in accidents involving school minibuses in each region in each of the last five years.

Mr. Key: The information requested is shown in the table.

Minibus[1] casualties: Number of school pupils[2] killed or injured: Great Britain 1988-92

London Heliport Study Group

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current membership of the London heliport study group; and when it is expected to report.

Mr. Norris: The membership of the London heliport study working group comprises representatives of the Department of Transport, Department of the Environment, Department of Trade and Industry, Civil Aviation Authority, British Helicopter Advisory Board, London Planning Advisory Committee, and Westland London heliport. The group expects to report by summer 1994.

River Thames Working Group

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the objectives of the River Thames working group; and when the group will report to him.

Mr. Norris: The River Thames working group, which I chair, is reviewing current transport uses of the River Thames and possible constraints on those uses. It will establish the potential for the development of the river for transport, particularly freight, alongside other river interests, and identify and encourage private sector-led initiatives. My Department has recently engaged Wootton Jeffreys Consultants Ltd. to assist it in analysing the information that the group has received following a wide-ranging consultation exercise which I launched last year. The working group is aiming to complete its report in July.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods vehicles have suffered shattered windscreens during trial runs through the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Commissioning of the tunnel system is a matter for Eurotunnel. I understand that no vehicle windscreens have been shattered.

Motorcycles (Leg Protectors)

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department is planning into leg protectors for motor cycles.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 21 March to a question tabled by the late hon. Member for Bradford, South, Official Report, column 107.

Marine Safety Agency

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of setting up the new Marine Safety Agency.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The additional cost for setting up the Marine Safety Agency was approximately £253,000.

Coastguard Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of setting up the new Coastguard Agency and replacing the National Coastguard Service.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The cost of setting up the Coastguard Agency, comprising Her Majesty's Coastguard and the marine pollution control unit was £231,000.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the recently published joint National Air Traffic Service and International Air Transport Association recommendation leaflet concerning runway occupancy times and the need for pilots of landing aircraft to ensure expeditious clearance of the runway has been approved by the safety regulation group of the regulatory authority; and whether the associated air traffic procedures have been approved by the Civil Aviation Authority's air traffic control standards department;

(2) what are the reasons for establishing a runway hourly movement monitor to compare actual movement rates achieved with the declared runway capacity and for the requirement of air traffic controllers at Manchester to submit to an internal management investigation if they fail to achieve the declared hourly movement rate.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 18 April 1994]: As these two questions concern matters that are within the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, I am asking the chairman of the CAA to write to the hon. Member.

Railtrack

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to meet the chairman of Railtrack to discuss the tendering timetable for retail developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 April 1994]: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the chairman of Railtrack to discuss a range of issues, including opportunities for retail developments on Railtrack property. We expect Railtrack to report during the summer on the prospects for retail and development opportunities at certain major stations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if all sheep exported from the United Kingdom to Spain for slaughter and for further fattening (a) have been and (b) will be slaughtered in abattoirs which are guaranteed by the Spanish Government as complying with directive 74/577/EEC requiring the stunning of animals before slaughter.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The answer given to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 16 February, Official Report, column 847, set out the arrangements for ensuring that animals for immediate slaughter in Spain would be sent only to slaughterhouses that the Spanish authorities had confirmed as meeting Community welfare rules. These arrangements do not apply to animals for further fattening. The Government have, however, agreed further safeguards with the Spanish authorities under which they will carry out checks to ensure that consignments for slaughter or further fattening are correctly described.

Norwegian Fisheries Regime

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will outline the conservation and control regime for fisheries allowed to Norway under the entry agreement with the EEC in (a) northern waters and (b) the rest of Norwegian fishing grounds; and in which ways this departs from the common fisheries policy as applied in British waters;

(2) what proposals she has for extending the Norwegian management and control regime for fisheries permitted under the entry agreement with the EU to British waters; and what plans she has to urge that such a regime be extended to other national waters.

Mr. Jack: In waters north of 62 deg. north, for a transitional period of three years from accession, Norway is authorised to maintain:

(a) national control measures which involve, for example, making rendezvous with inspectors at sea, and

(b) the ban on discarding fish at sea and the system for opening and closing fisheries in biologically sensitive zones, neither of which policies is applied by the CFP.

Norway is also authorised to maintain the existing technical conservation measures—national mesh size rules, for example—applicable north of 62 deg. north for one year.

South of 62 deg. north, for a transitional period of one year from accession, Norway is authorised to maintain national control measures, the discard ban and the existing technical conservation measures applying in these waters.

Before the end of these transitional periods the Council will decide on future arrangements with the objective of incorporating Norwegian practices into the CFP where appropriate. The discussions in the Council will provide an opportunity to consider the applicability of these measures outside existing Norwegian waters.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she last met members of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations to discuss the Norwegian accession.

Mr. Jack: I briefed representatives of the NFFO and of other fishermen's organisations fully on the outcome of the Norwegian accession negotiations on 22 March.

Reserve Stocks

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current size in terms of (a) weight and (b) volume of the European Communities' reserve stocks of (a) cereals, (b) beef, (c) grain, (d) butter, (e) milk and (f) wine; and how these have varied since 1979.

Mr. Jack: Tables showing current levels of all produce held in intervention within the European Community are deposited in the Library of the House at monthly intervals, most recently on 8 April. The information currently held in the House Library goes back to January 1985; figures for earlier years were not prepared on the same basis, but the table gives intervention stocks as at 31 December for the years 1979-84.

European Community Foodstuffs held in Public Intervention Storage ('000 tonnes)

Wine Alcohol (million litres)	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	2

Note:
n/a = not applicable (no Public Intervention Storage arrangements).

Animals (Transport)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she has taken to raise awareness of issues of welfare in the transportation of live animals with the Governments of other member states.

Mr. Soames: The Government take every opportunity in the Council of Agriculture Ministers and elsewhere to press for our high standards of animal welfare during transport to be applied throughout the European Community.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what animal identification methods will be acceptable under the EU directive 92/65/EEC on the import and export of animals.

Mr. Soames: The current arrangements for identifying animals for import and export are not altered by directive 92/65 except in the case of cats and dogs imported into the United Kingdom. From 1 July 1994 traded cats and dogs imported under the directive will have to be identified with an implanted microchip.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Ministers of her Department have supported in meetings of the Council of Ministers a maximum journey time of eight hours for livestock.

Mr. Soames: In Community negotiations the United Kingdom is taking full account of the case for journey limits and how they could be enforced.

European Directives

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions (a) the European Commission and (b) other member states can take against member states that do not enforce implementation of European directives.

Mr. Jack: Where the European Commission considers that a member state has failed to fulfil a Community obligation it may, in accordance with article 169 of the treaty of Rome, deliver a reasoned opinion, after giving the member state the opportunity to submit its observations. If the member state does not comply with the opinion, the Commission may bring the matter before the European Court of Justice. Similarly, if a member state considers that another member state has failed to fulfil a Community obligation it may, under article 170 of the treaty of Rome, bring the matter before the European Court of Justice. Before it does so, however, it must give the Commission an opportunity to consider the dispute.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the outcome of the Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 12 April.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 13 April 1994, Official Report, columns 183-84.

Premium Payments

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the budget, in real and nominal terms, for England in (i) 1991, (ii) 1992, (iii) 1993 and (iv) her estimate for 1994 for (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium and (c) the beef special premium.

Mr. Jack: The table shows expenditure by financial year under the sheep annual premium, the suckler cow premium and the beef special premium schemes in nominal terms and at constant 1991-92 prices.

£ million

Scheme		1991-92	1992-93	1993-94 forecast	1994-95 estimate
Sheep annual premium	Nominal	117	139	208	183
	At 1991-92 prices	117	135	198	n/a
Suckler cow premium	Nominal	34	34	31	56
	At 1991-92 prices	34	33	29	n/a
Beef special premium	Nominal	26	20	49	69
	At 1991-92 prices	26	20	47	n/a

Fruit and Vegetables

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the total amounts of fruit and vegetables destroyed by the European Community in 1991-92; what was the purpose of such destruction; and when comparable figures will be produced for 1992-93.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The information, produced by the Commission, on the destruction of fruit and vegetables withdrawn from the market in 1991-92 is as follows:

Product	Quantity destroyed (tonnes)
Cauliflowers	40,503
Apricots	93,653
Tomatoes	49,370
Aubergines	543
Nectarines	36,362
Peaches	336,992
Lemons	13,445
Pears	634
Grapes	291
Apples	26,134
Satsumas	[1]—
Mandarins	2,723
Clementines	1,654
Oranges	154,943

[1]— No withdrawals.

The EC fruit and vegetable regime provides growers with compensation for withdrawing produce from the market when prices fall below a certain level. This produce may be disposed of by several means with destruction being a last resort once all other alternative uses have been exhausted. The Government consider that the system sustains overproduction and are therefore pressing the Commission for a radical reform of the arrangements.

We expect the Commission to produce comparable figures for 1992-93 shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Accommodation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office accommodatoin at 11 Belgrave road, London SW1.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not responsible for 11 Belgrave road, London SW1.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office building, Marlborough house.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not responsible for Marlborough house.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office building, Depot, Chadwick street, London SW1.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not responsible for Depot, Chadwick street, London SW1.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office building, Thames house, Millbank, London SW1.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not responsible for Thames house, Millbank, London SW1.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office building, 1 to 19 Victoria street, London SW1.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not responsible for 1 to 19 Victoria street, London SW1.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what administrative framework the IGADD nations have set up to ensure the implementation of the recent agreement in Nairobi between the participants in the Sudanese civil war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer to his written question on 13 April at column 206.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to appointing a full-time Nairobi-based diplomat to monitor both political and aid issues particularly in southern Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Staffing requirements at all overseas posts are kept under regular review. We are currently satisfied with the coverage of southern Sudan which we receive from our missions in Khartoum and Nairobi.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in Sudan to introduce zones of tranquility in line with the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development agreement in Nairobi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A sub-committee has been set up to implement the agreements reached at the recent IGADD talks. It is still too early to establish what progress this sub-committee can make.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is being done by Britain and the European Union to give practical support to the IGADD talks on Sudan in Nairobi; and what action is now planned by (a) the international community and (b) the United Kingdom to assist the special rapporteur to be effective following the extension of his appointment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Discussions are taking place with EU partners and the United Kingdom will be making a bilateral contribution.

Britain co-sponsored the resolution for the extension of the United Nations special rapporteur's mandate, and we will consider any request for assistance which he might make.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 922, and his written answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 20, if he will now seek by letter to obtain a written confirmation of the assurances he received during the contacts between his office and that of Mr. Delors and place copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No, the undertakings in the social field to which my hon. Friend the Minister of State referred in his answer of 30 March were oral assurances.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals have recently been living in Rwanda; and what has been done to ensure their safety.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Seventy-eight nationals were registered with our honorary consul in Rwanda.

From early morning on Sunday 10 April, through the BBC World Service and our honorary consul in Kigali, British nationals were advised to leave the country. By the evening of Wednesday 13 April all those who wished to leave had done so. We liaised closely with the Belgian and French authorities who co-ordinated the evacuation of British nationals from Rwanda. Most travelled by air to Belgium, France and Kenya. British missions in those countries met the evacuees and, when necessary, helped with onward travel.

Chernobyl

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government about the adequacy of its plans to counter the consequences of radioactive infection after Chernobyl and to prevent any future radioactive accident.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the break-up of the former Soviet Union, responsibility for Chernobyl has fallen to the Ukrainian Government. A number of representations have been made in particular to the Russian and Ukrainian Governments by western Governments on the need to avoid a recurrence of the Chernobyl accident and to improve the levels of safety in Soviet-designed nuclear power reactors. The United Kingdom is engaged both bilaterally and multilaterally in providing both countries with substantial technical and other assistance to that end.

Russia-European Union Agreement

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the major contents of the proposed agreement between Russia and the European Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The main features of the draft partnership and co-operation agreement under negotiation between Russia and the European Union are:

(a) Regular political dialogue (including at Head of Government level).

(b) Limited trade concessions. These consist of the granting of most favoured nation treatment and the abolition of quantitative restrictions accompanied by safeguard provisions. It sets the eventual goal of a possible free trade area between Russia and the EU. Progress towards this goal will be reviewed in 1998.

(c) Sectoral cooperation in areas such as the approximation of laws, funded by technical assistance through the TACIS scheme.

(d) The draft also allows for future evolution of the agreement and for its suspension in the event of either side failing to fulfil its obligations.

Nuclear Weapons, South Asia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he is considering to stop the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the south Asia region.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our objective remains to secure India and Pakistan's accession to the non-proliferation treaty as non-nuclear weapon states. We continue to encourage both countries to engage in dialogue on regional security, and we support United States proposals to establish a multilateral forum on regional security in south Asia. We have also voted in favour of a resolution at the United Nations which calls for the establishment of a nuclear weapon-free zone in south Asia.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent President Yeltsin is consulted over all strategic decisions relating to UNPROFOR operations in Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Regular consultations in the Security Council and bilaterally take place between Ministers and officials of nations closely involved in the former Yugoslavia, of which Russia is one.

Economic Community of West African States

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide advice and assistance to the Economic Community of West African States in order to help develop its peacekeeping and peacemaking roles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has no plans to provide advice or assistance to ECOWAS in the field of peace keeping, although we supported the establishment of the United Nations operation in Liberia in which ECOMOG troops work alongside United Nations military observers.

Intelligence Services Bill

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the source of funding for compensation payments to complainants as provided for in the Intelligence Services Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the provisions of the Bill, the tribunal may direct my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to pay to a complainant such sum by way of compensation as may be specified either by the tribunal or by the commissioner. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary would consider all the individual circumstances of a case before determining from which budget any compensation award would come. Any payments would have to come out of existing provisions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Proton Cars

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Proton cars were purchased by his Department in each of the last 10 years for which information is available; and at what cost.

Sir John Wheeler: None.

Health and Social Services Trusts

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations have been consulted over the membership of the proposed Down and Lisburn unit trust and Craigavon and Banbridge unit trust; and which organisations were invited to nominate members to the trusts.

Mr. Ancram: My noble Friend Baroness Denton, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State advises me that her predecessor did not consult on the membership of the Down and Lisburn and Craigavon and Banbridge Health and Social Services Trust boards.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he or his colleagues had with the Eastern and Southern health and social services boards regarding the membership of the boards of the Down and Lisburn unit trust and Craigavon and Banbridge trust.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who were the lay helpers or assessors who were involved in the creation of the Down and Lisburn and Craigavon and Banbridge trusts; and what was their role.

Mr. Ancram: The lay helper for the Down and Lisburn trust was Mrs. Gillian Shaw and the lay helper for Craigavon and Banbridge community trust was Mr. David Cook.

The position of lay helper in any trust is informal—voluntary and unpaid. Normally the role of lay helper is to assist in drawing up the formal appliction, and to support the sponsors of the application by giving potential trusts access to the types of skills and experience that non-executive members are expected to bring to the trust board. They are also expected to identify potential candidates for appointment as non-executive directors on the board of the trust.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what appointments were made to the boards of the Craigavon and Banbridge and Down and Lisburn unit trusts; when they took office; and what is their remuneration.

Mr. Ancram: On 1 September 1993 the following appointments were made to the board of the Down Lisburn Health and Social Services Trust:

Chairman
Mr. Gillian Shaw

Non-Executive Directors
Mrs. Denise Fitzsimons
Mr. Albert Baird
Mr. Alfie Linehan
Mrs. Ann Colgan
Mr. Mark Ennis

Mr. David Cook was appointed chairman of the Craigavon and Banbridge Community Health and Social Services Trust on 23 November 1993. On 1 March 1994 the following non-executive directors were appointed:

Mr. John Fairleigh
Mr. Cyril McElhinney
Ms Roisin McDonough
Mr. Michael Morrow

Remuneration for chairmen is based on the revenue spending of the trust. On that basis, Mrs. Shaw receives £19,285 per annum and Mr. Cook receives £17,145. All non-executive directors receive £5,000 per annum.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations took place with the district councils in the Eastern and Southern board area, with members of the Southern and Eastern health boards, with members of the Southern and Eastern health and social services councils, or with hon. Members with constituencies covering the Southern and Eastern boards, regarding the membership of the Down and Lisburn and Craigavon and Banbridge trusts.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review the social fund system in respect of regional differences in applications and awards, the removal of budgetary considerations, clearer definitions of the circumstances in which an award is made, clarification of the priority groups and a wider remit for those the fund assists.

Mr. Ancram: The operation of the discretionary social fund is monitored routinely. We believe that the basic principles of the fund are right and working well. Nevertheless, we continue to monitor its effectiveness and to introduce operational improvements as required.

Details of the basis of allocation and district allocations for 1994-95 are in the Library.

Dental Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to undertake a review into the funding of children's dentistry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: There are no plans, at present, to undertake a review specifically into the funding arrangements for children's dentistry. The Government are, however, currently formulating proposals in relation to the future of national health service dentistry as a whole, and those proposals will take account of child dental health.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount spent annually per child under 18 years on general dental services in Northern Ireland, irrespective of registration with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne), on 11 March, Official Report, columns 436-37.

Overgrazing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures are in place to monitor whether meetings between his officials and producers to discuss ways of reducing overgrazing have led to reductions in overgrazing.

Mr. Ancram: County agriculture development officers have instructions to satisfy themselves that any measures agreed with farmers to reduce overgrazing are sufficiently monitored.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures are in place to reduce environmental damage caused through overgrazing consequent on that damage continuing after hill livestock compensatory allowances are withheld as a result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause.

Mr. Ancram: There are no overgrazing provisions in the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme beyond the withholding of allowances. A consultation paper has, however, recently been issued on a proposal to introduce similar overgrazing provisions with other livestock subsidy schemes.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many farmers have had hill livestock compensatory allowances withheld in 1992, 1993 and 1994 as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many farmers have been approached by his officials to discuss ways of reducing overgrazing in each year since the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None. The overgrazing provisions are designed to ensure that farmers are informed of concern about changes in the condition of vegetation. Only a very small minority of farmers is likely to be affected.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures are in place to monitor whether overgrazing has reduced following the withholding of hill livestock compensatory allowances as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause.

Mr. Ancram: No hill livestock compensatory allowances have been withheld.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hill livestock compensatory allowances he has withheld in 1992, 1993 and 1994 as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Livestock Allowances

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the budget, in real and nominal terms, for Northern Ireland in (i) 1991, (ii) 1992, (iii) 1993 and (iv) his estimate for 1994 for (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium and (c) the beef special premium.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is in the table:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Car Crime

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the rate of car crime in each year since 1990;

(2) how many thefts from vehicles were reported in each year since 1990;

(3) how many vehicles were reported stolen in each year since 1990;

(4) how many incidents of joyriding were reported in each year since 1990;

(5) what is the clear-up rate of vehicle crime, both in absolute numbers and as a percentage of reported cases by the police (a) nationally and (b) in Lancashire in each year since 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to offences recorded by the police and is published annually in chapter 2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"; copies of which are available in the Library. Information for 1993 is not yet available.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of hijacking of cars were reported in each year since 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

Braille Ballot Papers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide Braille ballot papers at polling stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial incidents were reported to police forces in England and Wales in 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Police forces are required to provide this information at the end of the fiscal year rather than the calendar year. The number of racial incidents recorded by each police force in England and Wales for the year April 1993 to March 1994 will be published once all the figures have been received and collated.

Electoral Register

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many European Union citizens from other member states have registered to vote as per their entitlements under the Maastricht treaty; if he will provide a breakdown by parliamentary constituency; and what advice he gave to local registration officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of Union citizens registering to vote at the forthcoming European parliamentary elections will not be available until the special supplementary register is published on 9 May. We intend to make the information public as soon as possible after that. Guidance has been issued to electoral registration officers on all matters relating to the registration of Union citizens.

Prosecution Limitation Rule

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases he is aware of in each of the last 10 years where a prosecution for murder or manslaughter has not been possible because of the 366 day rule.

Mr. Maclean: Such information is not collected centrally. I understand, however, that the Crown Prosecution Service is aware of five cases in the last four years where the year and a day rule may have been a factor in a decision not to bring a prosecution for murder or manslaughter in England and Wales.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a breakdown of asylum seekers held in detention on 21 March (a) by nationality, (b) by gender, (c) by length of detention, (d) by place of detention and (e) by immigration status at the time of application.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested on the number of asylum seekers detained on 21 March is not available. The information available relates to people detained under Immigration Act powers on 15 April, who had applied for asylum at some stage and is as follows:

Voluntary Advice Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the level of funding from his Department for voluntary advice services for the financial year 1993-94 and each of the previous 10 years; and how many schemes received funding in each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. Figures for the financial years 1989-90 to 1992-93 are given in the table. These indicate the number of schemes run by voluntary organisations where the main aims included the provision of advice and information and show the level of Home Office funding. Figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Financial year	Number of schemes	Level of funding £
1989-90	7	333,584
1990-91	23	474,160
1991-92	22	663,635

Immigration Detainees (Hunger Strike)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what surveillance has been carried out of hunger strikers at Campsfield detention centre.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Detainees who claim to have refused meals for more than three days are placed in a separate unit at Campsfield house so that their medical condition can be closely monitored by qualified medical staff.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detainees, held under the Immigration Acts, are currently on hunger strike; for what length of time each has been on hunger strike; and where they are currently held.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 15 April, 20 people detained under Immigration Act powers in the following locations were claiming to have refused meals since the dates shown:

Places of detention	Number of detainees refusing meals	Date
Campsfield house	7	11 March (1), 12 March (1), 13 March (1), 14 March (2), 28 March (2)
Brixton	1	30 March
Canterbury	2	8 March, 15 March

Rochester	1	20 March
Winchester	1	8 March
Winson Green	1	19 March
Alexandra hospital	1	30 March
Epsom general hospital	1	8 March

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the hunger strikers in detention centres; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have received representations and inquiries from 20 hon. Members, as well as from noble Lords, representatives of the clergy, members and former members of Oxford university, organisations and members of the public.

It has been made clear to those detainees refusing food that we will not be pressurised into granting release as a result of this action. Equally, we are concerned to ensure that they understand the medical implications for themselves and that their medical condition is closely monitored. In addition, all detention is reviewed regularly and at an increasingly senior level. This review seeks to ensure that everything possible is being done to resolve the detainee's position so that he or she can be released or removed from the United Kingdom without unnecessary delay.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total cost of transferring prisoners from Blakenhurst prison to other prisons following the incident at Blakenhurst on 24 February;

(2) whether the inquiry into the incident at Her Majesty's Prison Blakenhurst on 24 February has yet been completed; and if the results will be made public.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters have been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 18 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the incident at Blakenhurst prison on 24 February, and the total cost of transferring prisoners from Blakenhurst to other prisons following that incident.

United Kingdom Detention Services (UKDS) bore all the costs of transporting the prisoners after the incident and thus the Prison Service have not incurred additional expenditure.

The report of the inquiry into the disturbance at Blakenhurst prison was submitted on 7 March 1994. Reports of such inquiries are internal management documents which we do not publish for the reasons given in my letter to you of 10 March [Official Report: Col. 360 10 March 1994].

Legal Advice

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the provision of a network of independent advice and law centres throughout England and Wales; and what response he has made to the Advice 2000 initiative launched by the Advice Services Alliance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to his question to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department.

Police Discipline

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals have been made to him by police officers in each of the last five years and how many such cases involved disciplinary proceedings which had resulted in (a) dismissal, (b) the officer being required to resign and (c) reduction in rank; how many such appeals in each category were decided in each of the last five years; in how many cases the appeals were (i) upheld or (ii) varied; and where reduction in rank was involved what was the reduction originally proposed and what was imposed after the appeal.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Statistical information relating to police disciplinary appeals is prepared on the basis of cases completed in each calendar year. Figures for the last five years are as follows:

Appeals completed	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993

European Court

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's current policy towards the right of individuals automatically to take cases to the European Court and the other reforms proposed by the Council of Europe.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Reforms of the machinery of the European convention on human rights are provided for in the draft 11th protocol to the convention. The United Kingdom proposes to sign the protocol at the meeting of Council of Europe Ministers on 11 May, and to ratify it in due course.

The United Kingdom has made a major contribution to the reforms, under which the European Commission and Court of Human Rights will be replaced by a single court. We have, for example, taken the lead in securing within the protocol effective and valuable provision for the friendly settlement of cases, for the re-hearing of cases brought by individual application and, in the final negotiations at Strasbourg on 21 to 25 March, for the re-hearing of "inter-state" cases.

As we explained in those negotiations, there are good reasons why the right of individual petition to the new court should be optional and renewable, whereas the protocol provides for this to be mandatory. We have decided to accept this in order to allow the institutional reforms to which we have made such a contribution to come into effect.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to the last letter, dated 1 February, concerning Mr. A. Benton, reference 30817/93.

Mr. Maclean: The West Midlands police are continuing to make detailed inquiries into Mr. Benton's representations of wrongful conviction. I understand from the chief constable that certain lines of inquiry are still outstanding, but that he hopes to submit a report of his inquiries shortly. Once that report is to hand and I have had a chance to consider all the evidence in the round, I will write to the hon. Member to say whether any grounds have been disclosed which would justify referring Mr. Benton's conviction back to the Court of Appeal.

Campsfield Detention Centre

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what other companies, or subsidiaries, of Group 4 have been used to provide security staff at Campsfield detention centre.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Security at Campsfield house is provided under contract by Group 4 Total Security Ltd., which has, on occasions, called on assistance from staff employed by Group 4 Securitas, including "Euroguard".

Coroner Peter Brunton

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when his Department plans to assess new evidence relating to Coroner Peter Brunton; and if he will take evidence from Mr. Geoffrey Turner;

(2) when he expects the investigation into the conduct of the coroner of Ceredigion in the case of Mr. Jeremy Turner to be completed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All representations received are being taken into account; any further written representation from Mr. Turner will be considered. We expect to report the outcome of the investigation into the conduct of Coroner Peter Brunton, in the case of Mr. Jeremy Turner, to the Lord Chancellor's Department by the end of May.

Prisons Ombudsman

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in appointing a prisons ombudsman.

Mr. Howard: I am pleased to announce that I am appointing Sir Peter Woodhead KCB as the prisons ombudsman. Sir Peter plans to take up the post in May, and our intention is that his new office will be established and will start to receive and investigate prisoners' complaints in the autumn. I welcome this as a significant step in providing a further safeguard for the fair and just treatment of prisoners.

WALES

Dental Services

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family health authorities have been unable to provide emergency dental services in the period since December 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Emergency dental service clinics currently operate in all Welsh family health services authority areas except Dyfed. There was a period up to May 1993 when Gwynedd family health services authority was also unable to arrange such a clinic.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have contacted each family health services authority asking for help in finding a dentist in the period since December 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information provided by Welsh family health services authorities since 4 December 1992 is as follows:

	Number
Clwyd	2,029
Dyfed	1,645
Gwent	1,292
Gwynedd	10,816
Mid Glamorgan	437
Powys	1,264
South Glamorgan	2,935
West Glamorgan	205

This information was provided for management purposes only and has not been statistically validated.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists have given written notice to have their names removed from dental lists since 4 December 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information provided by Welsh family health services authorities indicates that 44 dentists have given written notice to have their names removed from dental lists since 4 December 1992.

This information was provided for management purposes only and has not been statistically validated.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many continuing care dental patients have been de-registered; and how many dentists have de-registered patients in the period since December 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information provided by Welsh family health services authorities indicates that 12,190 patients were de-registered in the period since 4 December 1992.

During that period the number of dentists de-registering patients has not exceeded 20 in any fortnightly period.

This information was provided for management purposes only and has not been statistically validated.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many replies he has given since April 1992 to questions from hon. and right hon. Members stating that the information requested is already on the public record.

Mr. Redwood: Since April 1992, my predecessor and I received over 5,500 parliamentary questions. It is not possible to identify information in the form requested.

Orthopaedics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority concerning the provision and funding of additional Midas-Rex drills for revision orthopaedic surgery and other purposes at the Cardiff Royal group of hospitals;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the treatment centre at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar, near Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: While I have had no consultations with the chairmen, earlier today my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced funding for the treatment centre initiative for 1994-95. This includes £945,051 to provide 291 hip/knee replacements at the Rhydlafar centre, including £99,705 as a special measure to tackle waiting lists. Further funding, of £178,000 in 1994-95, is being made available for the extension of the initiative to provide a four-year programme of joint revision surgery within the Cardiff Royal group, including provision for the purchase of a Midas-Rex drill and other essential medical equipment.

Strategic Development Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each county and district council what allocation of funding has been made under the strategic development scheme and its predecessor schemes, including the urban programmes, rural initiative, projects of national and regional importance and special projects, for the last three years and for 1994-95.

Mr. Redwood: Allocations made to local authorities in Wales under the urban programme, rural initiative, projects of regional and national importance and special project schemes between 1991-92 and 1993-94 and the strategic development scheme in 1994-95 are set out in the table.

Local authority urban programme (UP), rural initiative (RI) project of national and regional importance/special projects (PRNI/SP) and strategic development scheme (SDS) allocations between 1991 and 1995

[1] Includes additional in-year allocations.
[2] Includes £0·5 million available to any local authority within the West Wales Task Force area.
[3] Does not include £1·9 million set aside for projects supported in principle for Carmarthen DC and Ceridigion DC.
[4] Includes slippage on schemes carried forward from 1993-94.
[5] Figures updated since Mr. Elfyn Llwyd's question (PQ 934/93/94) answered on 3 March 1994.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what method his Department calculates the index used to determine funding for strategic development schemes in local councils; what method is used to allow for sparsity of population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Funding under the strategic development scheme is allocated according to the quality of the bids which local authorities submit. In reaching decisions I have regard to the needs reflected in the index of socio-economic conditions. The composition of the index was agreed with the local authority associations and is compiled using eight factors largely derived from census information. The factors are measured in terms of both scale—that is, actual numbers—and intensity—that is, proportion of the population. The data are statistically transformed to make each factor comparable, weighted and combined to give an overall score for each electoral ward. The eight factors are:

a. Unemployment
b. Economically active population
c. Low socio-economic groups
d. Population loss in the 20 to 59 years age group
e. Permanently sick
f. Overcrowding in housing
g. Level of basic housing amenities
h. Standard mortality rate (relatives values only).

Sparsity of population is not a factor in the index.

School Admission Appeals

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the figures, in total and for each local education authority, of admission appeals by parents failing to obtain a place for their child in the school of their choice; and, of this total, how many (a) were withdrawn before committee stage, (b) were settled to mutual satisfaction before committee stage, (c) were rejected by committee and (d) were decided in the parents' favour by the committee for each year since 1989-90.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Advice Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the provision of a network of independent advice and law centres throughout Wales; and what response he has made to the aims of the Independent Advice Services in Wales initiative and the Advice 2000 initiative launched by the Advice Services Alliance.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department.

I cannot comment on the aims included in the reports, "Independent Advice Services in Wales" or "Advice 2000", as I have yet to receive copies.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of funding from the Welsh Office for voluntary advice services for the financial year 1993-94 and each of the previous 10 years; and how many schemes received funding in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. Figures for the financial years 1989-90 to 1992-93 are given in the table. These indicate the number of schemes run by voluntary organisations where the main aims included the provision of advice and information, and show the level of Welsh Office funding. Figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Financial year	Number of schemes	Welsh Office funding £
1989-90	15	533,025
1990-91	14	673,196
1991-92	24	797,456
1992-93	47	1,990,406

Agricultural Subsidies

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the budget, in real and nominal terms, for Wales in (i) 1991, (ii) 1992, (iii) 1993 and (iv) his estimate for 1994 for (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium and (c) the beef special premium.

Mr. Redwood: The budgets for the sheep annual premium, the suckler cow premium and the beef special premium schemes are set out by financial year in the tables. Table 1 shows the expenditure and provision in 1994-95 and table 2 shows the figures at 1994-95 prices adjusted using the current GDP deflator.

Notes

1. The figures in table 1 for 1991-92 and 1992-93 can be found in the respective appropriation accounts.
2. The figures in table 2 for 1993-94 will be finalised in the appropriation accounts which will be published later this year.
3. The figures for 1994-95 are available in the 1994-95 main supply estimate class XV vote 1.
4. Prior to 1993-94, beef special premium expenditure was the responsibility of the Intervention Board Executive Agency.

Overgrazing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers have been approached by his officials to discuss ways of reducing overgrazing in each year since the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. Claimants for the hill livestock compensatory allowances are warned that if the land on which the stock is kept is found to be overgrazed the payment will be reduced. There have been no cases so far where this has been necessary.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many farmers have had hill livestock compensatory allowances withheld in 1992, 1993 and 1994 as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause;

(2) how many hill livestock compensatory allowances he has withheld in 1992, 1993 and 1994 as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what procedures are in place to monitor whether meetings between his officials and producers to discuss way of reducing overgrazing have led to reductions in overgrazing.

Mr. Redwood: There have been no such meetings in Wales. However, my officials would satisfy themselves that any measures agreed with graziers to reduce overgrazing in the future are adequately monitored.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what procedures are in place to monitor whether overgrazing has reduced following the withholding of hill livestock compensatory allowances as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause.

Mr. Redwood: My Agriculture Department has arrangements with ADAS to undertake monitoring of the growth, quality and species composition of the vegetation on land which is considered to be overgrazed, to establish trends and to report on whether the measures taken have been sufficient to arrest further deterioration.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what procedures are in place to reduce environmental damage caused through overgrazing consequent on that damage continuing after hill livestock compensatory allowances are withheld as a result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause.

Mr. Redwood: The Department has arrangements with the Agricultural Development Advisory Service to undertake monitoring of the growth, quality and species composition of the vegetation on land which is considered to be overgrazed, to establish trends and to report on whether the measures taken have been sufficient to arrest further deterioration.

HEALTH

Dental Services, North Warwickshire

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists in practice in north Warwickshire (a) take national health services patients and (b) take private patients only, but took national health service patients until 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: At September 1993 the number of dentists providing general dental services in the Warwickshire family health services authority area, which includes North Warwickshire, was 149. The comparable number at 30 September 1990 was 146. Dentists are independent contractors who make their own decisions about whether to accept patients under national health service arrangements.

Nitrites

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence exists to connect the use of nitrites as aphrodisiac drugs with AIDS.

Mr. Sackville: Two studies published in 1993 investigated a relationship between the use of alkyl nitrites and the development of AIDS in homosexual men. One study followed up 812 homosexual and bisexual men in San Francisco for eight years. The second study followed 715 homosexual men in Canada for an average of 8·6 years. Both observed that AIDS-associated diseases occurred only in men who were infected with human immunodeficiency virus. Further, use of alkyl nitrites had no effect on the rate at which AIDS developed in HIV-infected men. Significant numbers of HIV-negative men used alkyl nitrites but these men did not develop AIDS-associated diseases. Smaller studies in the United Kingdom have found similar results.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being or has been conducted into the effect of nitrites, with particular reference to amyl nitrite, on the immune system; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There is no evidence that use of amyl nitrite causes severe, prolonged or progressive immunosuppression. A study of 715 homosexual men in Canada followed for an average of 8.6 years investigated the effect of amyl nitrite use on the CD4 cells of the immune system. The loss of circulating CD4 cells is observed in all patients with AIDS. The use of amyl nitrite inhalers had no effect on the number of circulating CD4 cells either in HIV-negative or HIV-positive men.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Sherman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish a high-level inquiry into the present level of deaths from breast cancer;

(2) when she will next meet representatives of general practitioners to discuss the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer;

(3) what steps she is taking to reduce the number of deaths from breast cancer;

(4) when she last met the Royal College of Surgeons to discuss the level of deaths from breast cancer in the United Kingdom;

(5) what action she is taking to spread best practice from the best health authorities and hospitals in the diagnosis, treatment and care of breast cancer to those areas and hospitals which perform badly.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to establish a specific inquiry into breast cancer deaths in this country. The Chief Medical Officer's expert advisory group on cancer is currently preparing advice for general practitioners and health authorities on the organisation of cancer services. These recommendations will be put to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and will be followed by consultation with relevant professional bodies.

Psychiatric Services

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average annual amount per capita spent on psychiatric services in East Anglia.

Mr. Sackville: My hon. Friend may wish to contact Dr. Stuart Burgess, chairman of the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority, for details.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the level of annual spending per capita on psychiatric services in (a) West Suffolk, (b) East Suffolk and (c) North Lincolnshire.

Mr. Sackville: Information on annual spending per capita on psychiatric services is not available centrally. However, information on annual spending per capita in 1992-93 on mental health services, which includes psychiatric services by district health authority is available in the Library.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many young doctors left the health service this year; and what were the figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals now have no junior doctors working more than 72 hours per week; what percentage this is of the total; if she will name the hospitals which have junior doctors working more than 72 hours per week; what plans she has to reduce the maximum weekly hours worked by junior doctors; and what considerations underlay the decision to apply quotas in respect of junior doctors to NHS trust hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on individual hospitals is not available centrally.

In England, there were 11,205 junior doctors and dentists contracted for more than 72 hours a week at 30 September 1993—43 per cent. of the total. Of these, 7,889 were in hard-pressed posts, a fall of 22 per cent. on the previous six months. Our priority is to eliminate all hard-pressed posts contracted for more than an average of 72 hours a week by the end of 1994. This is in accordance with the timetable in "The New Deal", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Regional task forces monitor and support implementation locally. I announced in March further central funding to support reductions in hours. This will mean that since "The New Deal" was launched in 1991 we have funded an extra 600 consultant and 150 staff grade posts to help reduce hours. Overall we have spent more than £115 million since 1991 to support the new deal. This is a clear indication of our commitment to tackle this problem.

Our medical staffing policy is set out in "Achieving a Balance: Plan for Action, 1987", a copy of which is also available in the Library. Its major objectives are to improve patient care by increasing the amount of care provided by fully trained hospital doctors and to safeguard the career opportunities of junior doctors.

Under "Achieving a Balance", arrangements exist to relate the number of United Kingdom and European Community doctors entering the registrar and senior registrar grades in all national health service hospitals to predicted consultant opportunities while continuing to allow overseas graduates access to the training grade. This aims to minimise the possibility of over or under-provision of training places in each specialty and the concomitant waste of resources. Regional task forces have responsibility for changing the number and distribution of senior house officers where this is needed to achieve new deal hours targets.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what level the decision as to the quota of junior doctors allocated to a trust hospital is taken.

Dr. Mawhinney: At senior and career registrar levels, the joint planning advisory committee is responsible for advising the national health service executive as to overall targets for all the medical and dental specialties. These targets are then allocated to regions, the special health authorities and Wales. Exact locations of posts within each region are then a matter for local decision, in discussion with postgraduate deans and specialty advisors to ensure the educational appropriateness of training facilities.

Control of senior house officer numbers has been devolved to the regional office task forces, in consultation with regional postgraduate deans.

Sex-Enhancing Drugs

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to warn people about the possible adverse effects of the use of sex-enhancing drugs, and in particular nitrates, and the possible impact of such substances on the immune system.

Mr. Sackville: Recently the Department ran a £2·6 million television and press campaign to inform parents in the fight against drugs and solvent misuse. We are also running a competition for schools "Acting for Health—Drugs, Smoking and Alcohol Abuse", which aims to encourage young people to think about the consequences of substance misuse and how it affects the individual, his or her family and friends and community. As part of our strategy to reduce substance misuse we are keeping the position regarding alkyl nitrites under close review.

Drug and alcohol abuse, including the use of sex-enhancing drugs, may increase the likelihood of indulgence in risky sexual behaviour which could lead to infection with sexually transmitted diseases. This message, including mention of alkyl nitrite inhalants, is included where appropriate in sexual health promotion material prepared for homosexual men.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence exists and what research has been or is being conducted into the link between the use of sex-enhancing drugs, with particular reference to nitrites, and cancer, with particular reference to Kaposi's sarcoma.

Mr. Sackville: There is no clear evidence that use of alkyl nitrites causes cancer in humans. Some studies reported an association in homosexual AIDS patients between development of Kaposi's sarcoma and prior use of alkyl nitrites. However, later studies have not confirmed this association. The epidemiology of Kaposi's sarcoma suggests the involvement of an infectious agent that can be transmitted sexually. It is possible that use of alkyl nitrites is associated with higher number of sexual partners and thus greater risk of infection with this agent. As well as the occurrence of Kaposi's sarcoma as a manifestation of AIDS, a less aggressive form of the disease is seen in elderly men of mediterranean origin and in Africa. Use of alkyl nitrites is likely to be rare in these populations.

High-alcohol Beers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she proposes to take to discourage young people from drinking high alcohol content beers.

Mr. Bowis: The Government are committed to encouraging everyone who drinks alcohol to do so sensibly including young people. The effects of alcohol are included in the national curriculum, and the Department, the Health Education Authority and the industry-sponsored Portman Group have all produced materials for young people. It is important that alcohol consumers should be aware of the strength of their drinks and in "The Health of the Nation," we announced we would seek agreement with alcohol trade associations for the display of this information at points of sale.

Homeless People

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has of the percentage of homeless people who have had a care order at some time in the past or at present.

Mr. Bowis: The Department does not collect information about the whereabouts of children once they have ceased to be looked after by a local authority and no figures are currently available about homeless children subject to court orders.

Press Officers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time taken for one of her press officers to answer a telephone call.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of Strachan Heppell's letter dated 6 September 1993 to the president of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry about how the new version of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme will be implemented.

Dr. Mawhinney: A copy has been placed in the Library.

Edgware General Hospital

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce her response to the public representations against the proposed closure of Edgware general hospital sent to her Department since the beginning of the year.

Mr. Sackville: Any proposal for a major change in services would be subject to a period of public consultation. The matter comes to Ministers if there are objections. All factors are taken into account including public representations.

Condoms

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Minister for Consumer Affairs following the lifting of price controls on condoms.

Mr. Sackville: There has been no formal meeting of Health and Consumer Affairs Ministers following the lifting of price control on condoms. The decision to accept the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission was taken by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs in the light of the fact that the Department of Health had given evidence to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, and in liaison with the Minister responsible for consumer affairs.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to publish the report of the Leigh review of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 11 March at column 445.

Vacant Consultant Posts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 79, what information has become available to her Department as a result of representations received about the number of hospital consultant posts that are currently vacant as a result of recruitment difficulties in (a) anaesthetics, (b) ophthalmology and (c) paediatrics.

Dr. Mawhinney: No new information has been made available as a result of representations received in the specialties mentioned.

Age Discrimination

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what monitoring procedures are in place to ensure that district hospital management committees and hospital trusts do not discriminate against the elderly by refusal to provide, or withdrawal of, treatment; and what further action she proposes to take;

(2) how many administrators and medical staff have been found to have used age as a means of determining access to treatment or physiotherapy facilities in the last five years; and what disciplinary measures have been taken in respect of them.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the duty of all health authorities to ensure that people of all ages have access to acute care and that specialist care is available to those who suffer with chronic conditions due to the aging process. We are satisfied that we have mechanisms in place for monitoring the performance of health authorities in this respect.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will lay down a streamlined procedure for patients who allege they have been discriminated against because of their age in the medical treatment they receive.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the duty of all health authorities to ensure that people of all ages have access to acute care, and that specialist care is available to those who suffer with chronic conditions due to the aging process. The patient's charter establishes a charter right to have any complaint about national health service services—investigated and to receive a full and prompt written reply. If patients think that they have been, or were likely to be, denied one of their national charter rights, they should write to the chief executive of the national health service executive who will investigate the matter. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently received a report on NHS complaints procedures and is considering its recommendations.

Wythenshawe Hospital Development Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 April, Official Report, columns 78-79, what is her estimate of the total cost saving expected for the revision of the Wythenshawe hospital development scheme; if she will provide a breakdown of her calculations; and when she expects to be able to give details of the impact of the revision on the scheme as originally proposed and on Withington and other Manchester hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: The revision of the Wythenshawe scheme is not yet finalised, and we are not therefore yet in a position to give further details.

Private Patient Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has received regarding proposals to convert NHS wards to dedicated private patient units.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Regional Health Authority Funding

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the revised funding formula for the allocation of resources to regional health authorities will be published;

(2) how long the consultation period will be on the new funding formula for the allocation of resources to regional health authorities; and which groups and organisations will be included in the consultation process.

Mr. Sackville: The results of the review of the weighted capitation formula, which is used to allocate resources to regional health authorities, are currently being evaluated. When the report has been presented to Ministers we shall consider the arrangements for circulation, and extent of the consultation required.

Adult Placement Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health wat evaluation she has undertaken of the impact of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 on the regulation of adult placement services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Following representations from the national organisations concerned with adult placement schemes, the social services inspectorate asked local authorities for information about how they intended to apply the guidance issued on implementation of the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities (a) directly regulate adult placement services through registration officers and (b) allow adult placement services themselves to regulate the services under the supervision of registration officers.

Mr. Bowis: There is no legislation requiring the registration of adult placement schemes as such. However, where residential accommodation, board and personal care are provided for up to three residents, registration of the home concerned is required under the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991, in the same way as for other small residential care homes.

No information is available centrally about the extent to which local authorities, in carrying out their responsibilities under the Act, rely on checks on individual carers made by the adult placement schemes rather than make checks directly themselves.

Temporary Ward Closures

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will monitor health authorities and trusts in order to establish whether temporary closure of long-stay elderly wards is used as a means to permanent closure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: No. District health authorities have a statutory duty to consult the relevant community health council on proposals they are considering that would result in substantial changes to local services.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that temporary closure of hospital wards is subject to full consultation procedures where this results in the break-up of specialist medical and nursing teams.

Mr. Sackville: Regulations specify that health authorities must consult where a substantial closure, development or variation of service is proposed. No distinction is made between permanent and temporary closure. A specialist medical and nursing team would normally only be changed for service reasons.

SCOTLAND

Conservation Areas

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the list of possible special areas of conservation will be moderated by him on economic, social, cultural and local characteristics before a list is issued for public consultation.

Sir Hector Monro: Yes.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has had to increase the openness and accountability of Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies.

Mr. Stewart: The Government and the Scottish Enterprise network keep under review the scope for increasing the existing openness and accountability of Scottish Enterprise and its local enterprise companies. My right hon. Friend recently invited Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies to consider how the already high level of accountability and openness in the network might be further developed to secure greater transparency and wider participation.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the existing contract for local enterprise companies comes to an end; and what procedure will be followed in choosing the successor companies.

Mr. Stewart: The local enterprise companies' operating contracts with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are renegotiated and renewed annually. Selection procedures, in the case of competing bids for a particular area, are an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Set-aside

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when an announcement on the rotational set-aside for non-LFA farmers not in less-favoured areas is to be made.

Sir Hector Monro: As I announced on 25 March, the EC Commission has agreed the regulation stipulating that the uncompensated set-aside requirement this year in respect of the 1993 overshoot in the Scottish non-LFA arable sector has been reduced to 0.54 per cent. My Department is now making arrangements for additional compensatory payments to be made to the farmers concerned; these will issue as soon as the Commission regulation comes into force.

Rented Housing

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many private landlords have been visited by rent officers in each year since 1990;

(2) how many private landlords were prevented by rent officers from providing accommodation for benefit claimants in each year since 1990;

(3) how many private landlords provided accommodation for benefit claimants in each year since 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Rent officers register fair rents for regulated tenancies, and determine reasonable rents for the purposes of housing benefit subsidy on request from local housing authorities, who decide whether to award housing benefit in individual cases. Rent officers are not required to visit landlords for either function, although they may inspect individual dwellings; and when registering a fair rent the rent officers may hold a consultation to which the landlord is invited, but which he need not attend. Figures are therefore not available for landlords as requested, but the figures for rent determinations for fair rent and housing benefit purposes are as follows:

Year	Fair rent	Housing benefit
1990	17,309	37,034
1991	15,554	39,670
1992	12,411	45,690
1993	12,163	50,231

Note:
These figures may include more than one determination relating to the same person.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total sum of rents referred to the rent registration service for the last year for which figures are available and the total sum of rents determined as reasonable for housing benefit subsidy for the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 March 1994]: It is estimated, on the basis of a 90 per cent. sample of cases recorded for 1993, that the total sum of rents referred to the rent registration service for housing benefit purposes was around £145 million and the total sum of rents determined was around £131 million.

Concessionary Travel Schemes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will commission a comparative study of the concessionary travel scheme in operation in the Greater London area and those currently in operation by regional authorities in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Regional and islands councils have discretionary powers under section 93 of the Transport Act 1985 which allow any local authority, or any two or more local authorities acting jointly, to establish a concessionary travel scheme for eligible categories of person. After local government reform the new councils will retain these powers and the Strathclyde passenger transport authority will have the power to establish a scheme for its area. Decisions on the extent and administration of such schemes are entirely for the local authorities concerned to consider, taking account of local needs and circumstances, and the Government do not propose to change these arrangements. Concessionary travel arrangements in London are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Construction Group Collapse

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations were carried out following the collapse of the Lafferty construction group; what action resulted from these investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Lafferty Construction Ltd. went into receivership on 18 August 1988, and into liquidation on 7 August 1989. Receivers are required by statute to report any unfit conduct by directors to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The joint receivers submitted an adverse conduct report on 7 August 1990, the liquidator on 8 August 1990. Applications to the court must be made within two years of the insolvent event. In this case the reports were not received until the 23rd month after the event and proceedings were not issued.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations were carried out following the collapse of the Lilley construction group; what action resulted from these investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Lillev plc, and group companies, went into receivership on 7 January 1993. Receivers are required by statute to report any unfit conduct by directors to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The joint receivers have complied with their statutory reporting obligations and the documentation provided is under consideration.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the arrangements for the transfer of Scottish Homes housing stock to other landlords; if the transfer price will reflect the market value of the stock; what discounts will be offered to landlords; what financial guarantees he will seek from purchasers to ensure that the rights of tenants are secure; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under section 2(3A) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988, the transfer of Scottish Homes housing stock requires the consent of my right hon. Friend, who issued guidance to Scottish Homes in February 1989 and February 1991. An independent valuer will assess the market value of the stock, taking into account the conditions attaching to the sale and this valuation will be used as a benchmark against which final decisions will be taken. The question of specific safeguards intended to protect tenants' rights is a matter for Scottish Homes as owners of the stock to consider. However, all disposals of stock must be in accordance with the guidance which has been issued and which provides for substantial safeguards for tenants. My right hon. Friend will withold his consent to any disposal if he is not satisfied that the interests of tenants have been fully protected.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of houses owned by Scottish Homes in each district council area in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regulations will govern ballots arranged by Scottish Homes on the transfer of housing stock; how many options will be put before tenants in the ballots; if tenants will retain the right to opt for Scottish Homes as existing landlord; if tenants will have a right to choose district councils as their landlord; what rules will govern management buy-out options; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In terms of Scottish Homes' published procedures for the transfer of its stock, an independent teller will be commissioned to undertake a postal ballot of tenants in the proposed transfer area. For operational reasons Scottish Homes has decided that the ballot paper will contain two options, the status quo or a move to a specified alternative landlord. However, the tenants' independent advisor will be able to feed tenants' views into Scottish Homes' consideration of the preferred alternative landlord. The guidance which has been issued to Scottish Homes by my right hon. Friend makes it clear that it will be for Scottish Homes to decide whether there are special circumstances relating to particular houses which would make the local authority an appropriate alternative landlord. He would however expect this to arise only in exceptional circumstances and where such disposal did not compromise the Government's objective of promoting diversity of choice. Scottish Homes has established a code of conduct to govern management buy-outs, which will be open to competition from other landlords.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if members of staff of Scottish Homes who are involved in the development of management takeover bids in relation to the disposal of their employer's housing stock are being, or will be, granted permission to do so during working hours or given equivalent time off from routine duties.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes and I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Tourist Signs

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what rules and regulations govern the erection of directional signage on or near public highways by businesses to assist drivers to locate hotels and tourist attractions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The erection of advertisements on or near a public road is controlled under provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 and the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) (Scotland) Regulations 1984 and to the extent that they may represent an obstruction, under the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984. Where the advertisements are intended to give directions to motorists they are also subject to the provisions of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984.

Road signs giving directions to hotels and tourist attractions may be erected by traffic authorities. Such road signs are subject to the provisions of the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1981 and to any relevant directions made by the Secretary of State. Circular No. 3/1992 "Tourist Signposting", a copy of which has been placed in the Library, provides advice and guidance to local authorities on the circumstances in which such direction signs may be appropriate.

Denominational Education

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Roman Catholic Education Commission to discuss the continued provision of denominational education in Scotland; what aspects of the subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Catholic Education Commission on 25 February 1994. At that meeting a range of issues relating to denominational education was discussed, including school transport and catchment areas. Archbishop Winning, who was present at the meeting, has since publicly welcomed the positive progress made in the Government's discussions with the commission.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current outstanding loan debt of Scottish local authorities in relation to (a) housing and (b) general services; how much in each case and in (i) cash and (ii) percentage terms this debt accounts for in relation to (1) rents and (2) council tax bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The available information is set out in the table.

	Per cent.	£ million
Housing revenue account
Outstanding debt at 31 March 1993	—	3,823
Loan charges 1993-94[1]	—	[2]500
Income from standard rents 1993-94	—	[3]926
Loan charges as percentage of standard rental income in 1993-94	54	—
General fund services
Outstanding debt at 31 March 1993	—	4,624
Loan charges 1993-94[3]	—	[4]730
Budgeted income from council tax 1993-94[5]	—	912
Loan charges as percentage of budgeted income from council tax in 1993-94	80	—

[1] Repayment of principal, interest on debt and loans fund expenses.
[2] Provisional outturns.
[3] Repayment of principal and interest on debt.
[4] Local authority budget estimates for 1993-94.
[5] Income which authorities budgeted to raise from the council tax for 1993-94.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the application of the annuality principle to local authority revenue budgets; what studies have been undertaken into the cost-effectiveness of fixed annual budgeting on the provision of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no evidence that annuality creates any difficulty for local authority revenue budgets and has no plans for such a review. However, to assist local authorities in their financial planning, he announced for the first time last December the plans he had made for both Government-supported expenditure and aggregate external finance for the two forward years of the 1993 public expenditure survey. My right hon. Friend plans to take similar action in future years.

Youth Unemployment, Renfrew

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under [illegible] years of age there were in Renfrew district on the latest date for which figures are available who were not employed and had not had a youth training opportunity offered to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information in the form requested is not available.

Domestic Utilities

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of privatised utility companies to discuss the abolition of standing charges on domestic bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Ministers and officials meet senior managers of the privatised utility companies from time to time to discuss a range of issues. Standing charges, like all tariff issues, are the responsibility of the utilities themselves and their regulators.

Economic Initiative Area, Renfrew

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish an economic initiative area in any part of Renfrew district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: There have already been established in Renfrew district the Ferguslie Park Partnership and a smaller urban renewal initiative in Barrhead. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to establish further economic initiative areas in Renfrew district. The local authority, local enterprise companies and others are, however, free to decide to target their activities and resources on particular areas of perceived need or opportunity. The Glasgow airport initiative is an example of such an initiative established to take advantage of economic development opportunities in the area.

Monklands District Council

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to whom the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has written seeking evidence about alleged corruption at Monklands district council; if he will list their names and offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 March 1994]: None of the Scottish Office Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, in their position as Scottish Office Ministers, has written to anyone in Monklands district council seeking evidence about the alleged corruption of Monklands district council.

Undergraduates

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of full-time undergraduates in Scottish higher education institutions are on four-year courses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 April 1994]: In 1992-93, the percentage of full-time undergraduates in Scottish higher education institutions registered for four-year courses was 62·4 per cent. and for courses of four years and over was 73·4 per cent.

Rural Enterprise Programme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the rural enterprise programme on marketing.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 April 1994]: A baseline study was undertaken in 1991 to provide a benchmark against which to measure the effects of the rural enterprise programme, including the marketing element of the scheme. This provides a basis for a full evaluation of the impact of the programme, which we plan to commission in 1995.

Islands Shipping Subsidies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when KPMG Management Consultants was instructed to prepare a report on the operation of the tariff rebate subsidy scheme and shipping services to the Scottish islands.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 April 1994]: On 4 August 1993.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has yet received the report from KPMG Management Consultants in respect of its inquiries into the tariff rebate subsidy scheme and shipping services to the Scottish islands.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 April 1994]: No. I expect to receive KPMG's report in the near future.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total level of financial support for shipping services to Orkney and Shetland under the tariff rebate subsidy scheme in 1993-94.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 April 1994]: Financial support for shipping services to Orkney and Shetland in 1993-94 totalled £7·833 million.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the operating subsidies to Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd., P and O Scottish Ferries and Coastal Shippers for 1993-94, estimated outturn, and 1994-95 plans, in the same form as table 3.39 of his Department's "Statement of Expenditure Plans Serving Scotland's Needs 1993".

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Support to shipping services

	£ million 1993-94 outturn	1994-95 plans
Operating subsidies
Caledonian MacBrayne	[1]10·6	5·7
P and O	6·1	6·8
Coastal Shippers	3·0	3·1
Total	[1]19·7	15·6

[1]Includes an additional £3·4 million to eliminate the deficit which would otherwise have been incurred in the period January to March 1994, that is the transitional period between the company's old calendar year accounting period and the new fiscal year accounting period.

Overgrazing

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what involvement Scottish Natural Heritage has had in operating the measures introduced to prevent overgrazing under the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland, the predecessor body to Scottish Natural Heritage, and a range of environmental organisations were consulted about the introduction of this measure.

Undeclared Fish Catches

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to stop the landing of unlogged fish around the coast; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency attaches a high priority to curbing clandestine landings, which are damaging to the conservation of fish stocks and to the future prosperity of the fishing industry. Substantial resources are targeted towards the detection and prevention of this activity. Regular out of hours patrols are undertaken by fishery officers and fishery protection vessels are deployed at harbours where there is a known risk of undeclared landings.

Rosyth Naval Base

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the employment implications to Fife and Scotland of a possible closure of Rosyth naval base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 April 1994]: There are currently some 1,600 civilians working in Rosyth naval base and some 2,700 Navy personnel either working in the naval base and the immediate vicinity or based on ships operating from Rosyth. Under present plans, stemming from decisions taken in 1992, the number of civilian employees will be reduced to 1,300 and the number of Navy personnel to around 2,300 by 1 April 1995.

As the Secretary of State for Defence has made clear, all relevant factors will be taken into account before any decisions are made on recommendations arising from the naval infrastructure study and other defence costs studies. It is too early to speculate on the outcome for Rosyth or any other naval base.

Economy, Fife

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the proportion of Fife's economy which is dependent on defence.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The Scottish Office Industry Department's current assessment is that between 8 per cent. and 13 per cent. of civilian employment in Fife is directly employed in defence-related work, depending on whether or not armed forces personnel are included in the calculation.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to deal with any further loss of jobs; and what are his proposals for strengthening the Fife economy.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 April 1994]: It is for the local enterprise company, Fife Enterprise, in collaboration and partnership with others in the public and private sectors, to decide in the first instance on the strategy and appropriate measures to tackle the employment and economic development needs and opportunities in the region. I am sure the local enterprise company would be happy to discuss its plans with the hon. Member should she find that helpful.

For those who are, unfortunately, made redundant or become unemployed, the full range of measures available through the local enterprise company or the Employment Service will, of course, remain available.

Prison Capacity

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about capacity limits for prison accommodation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 19 April 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about capacity limits for prison accommodation.

As at 1 April 1994, the design capacity of the prisons estate in Scotland was 5,736, largely in the form of single cell accommodation. Allowing for cells not available because of redecoration or damage repair work, refurbishment (including in some cases to provide night sanitation) or for other policy reasons (including being retained in the event of an emergency), a total of 5,159 places were in use at that time.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (a) all pensioners, (b) pensioners aged 75 years or over, (c) pensioners aged 80 years or over and (d) pensioners aged 85 years or over were in receipt of income support at (i) the latest date for which figures are available, (ii) five years earlier, (iii) 10 years earlier and (iv) 15 years earlier.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table.

Pensioners receiving income support/supplementary benefit as a percentage of the Great Britain population

Year	60 and over	75 and over	80 and over	85 and over
1993	14·7	25·4	31·2	35·8
1988	14·8	23·7	27·5	30·4
1983	16·7	25·3	27·0	27·1
1978	18·2	25·9	27·0	27·8

2. For Income Support purposes, pensioners are defined as cases where the claimant and/or partner is aged 60 or over.

3. For Supplementary Benefit purposes, pensioners are defined as claimants over pensionable age. This definition excluded certain cases (particularly men aged 60-64) who would be counted as pensioners under Income Support.

4. Percentages have been calculated from the resident population of Great Britain of the appropriate age group.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many tenants in (a) the public and (b) the private sectors are in receipt of housing benefit; what percentage this is of the total number of tenants in each sector; if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into district council areas or other geographical area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Geographical area[1]	Tenants with Housing Benefit (Thousands)[2]		As a percentage of all dwellings[3]
	Local Authority	Private	Local Authority	Private
North (including Cumbria)	232	74	65	49

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the budgeted expenditure for the disability working allowance in 1993-94; and how much of that has actually been taken up.

Mr. Scott: The Government's expenditure plan for disability working allowance for 1993-94 was £16* million and the estimated outturn will be £10* million.

Child Support Agency

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received that the operation of the Child Support Agency is increasing the number of legal contests over child custody;

(2) what representations he has received indicating that (a) a clean break settlement involving capital payments not yet finalised may be reconsidered and (b) future such clean break settlements will not take place as a result of the operations of the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received (a) asking that travel costs by absent parents to visit children be included in the assessments for maintenance payments by the Child Support Agency and (b) indicating that the contact with such children by absent parents will be diminished by the present system of assessing maintenance payments;

(4) what representations he has received indicating that the work of the Child Support Agency is prompting some persons into voluntarily giving up work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Ministers have received representations from hon. Members, organisations and members of the public about various aspects of the child support scheme. Information about which representations refer to a particular aspect is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Families (Statistics)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of children of single parent families live in families where no maintenance payments are made by the non-custodial parent to the custodial parent in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) the USA;

(2) what proportion of parents under the age of 18 years were (a) married, (b) divorced, (c) separated and (d) never married in 1970, 1980, 1990 and 1994 in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) France, (iii) Germany and (iv) the USA;

(3) what proportion of children of lone parent families live in families where the non-custodial parent is unknown in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) the USA.

Mr. Hague: This information is not available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women contesting invalidity benefit appeals on the grounds of European sex equality legislation have had a benefit award from a social security appeals tribunal or an adjudication officer suspended under the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987, regulation 37 and 37A, that is, suspension in individual cases and in identical cases, respectively; what percentages of the total number of awards these represent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The latest available information about the number of payments suspended relates to 31 August 1993, at which time increased payment was being suspended in 33,442—97·86 per cent.—of the 34,175 cases considered. Separate information for cases being appealed individually and other cases where the issues are identical but no appeal has been made is not available.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 10 March concerning a constituent, 6/3644/74.

Mr. Hague: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 18 April.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 7 December 1993 and 14 March 1994 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. M. Hussain.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the right hon. Member on 22 December 1993 and 18 April 1994.

Benefits, North Warwickshire

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving (a) attendance allowance, (b) disability allowance, (c) family credit, (d) income support, (e) invalidity benefit and (f) sickness benefit in each of the Benefits Agency districts which fall within the north Warwickshire area; and what proportion of each figure represents persons resident in the north Warwickshire area.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Mike O'Brien dated 18 April 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about benefit recipients in the North Warwickshire area.

The full range of information requested is not available and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics are only available by Benefits Agency District for the locally administered benefits, Income Support, Invalidity Benefit, and Sickness Benefit and, of the centrally administered benefits, Family Credit. Unfortunately, the computer systems used to administer Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance do not identify recipients by Benefits Agency District, and to obtain figures for these benefits would require an exercise examining each individual claim, which could only be undertaken at a disproportionate cost.

I have therefore shown below figures for the Benefits Agency's Warwickshire District which deals with the North Warwickshire area. As the Warwickshire District also deals with areas other than North Warwickshire it is not possible to say what proportion of these figures relate to persons actually resident in North Warwickshire.

It should be noted that statistical data for each of the benefits is collected and collated over different periods and timescales. The latest available figures show that the Agency's Warwickshire District on the last working day of February 1994 there were 35,222 people claiming Income Support; on the last working day of March 1994 there were 10,924 people claiming Invalidity Benefit and 2,021 people claiming Sickness Benefit, and at 18 March 1994 there were 3,430 people claiming Family Credit.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

EMPLOYMENT

Minimum Wage Legislation

13. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his assessment of the effect of the abolition of the minimum wage legislation on youth employment prospects in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Hunt: The introduction of a minimum wage would result in widespread job destruction.

Part-time and Temporary Workers

14. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people at the latest date for which figures are available were in part-time or temporary employment.

Miss Widdecombe: At the end of last year there were 6·9 million part-time jobs in Great Britain and 1·4 million of all persons employed held temporary contracts.

Health and Safety

15. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to reduce the numbers of deaths and injuries at work.

Mr. David Hunt: Responsibility for ensuring work-place health and safety rests with employers and others most directly involved. The Health and Safety Commission's priorities for promoting improvements in health and safety at work will be set out in its plan of work for 1994-95.

23. Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how often, on average, a workplace can expect to be visited by officials inspecting health and safety standards.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no fixed period between inspections of workplaces. When planning visits, health and safety inspectors give priority to premises that are known to pose a higher risk to employees and the public. The highest-risk sites are inspected once a year. In addition to planned inspection, visits to workplaces are made for a variety of other purposes, for example to give advice and guidance and to investigate accidents, incidents or complaints.

28. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the outcome of recent meetings he has held regarding health and safety issues.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's most recent meeting specifically to discuss issues of health and safety was with the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) to discuss the Health and Safety Executive's investigation of an incident in his constituency. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has particular responsibility for health and safety, and conducts the majority of meetings on that topic.

Older Workers (Training)

16. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives his Department has taken to improve the training prospects of older workers.

Miss Widdecombe: We have raised the upper age limit of training for work to 63 years from this month. This is in accord with my "Getting On" campaign, in support of older workers.

Youth Unemployment, West Midlands

17. Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the west midlands between the ages of 18 and 25 years are unemployed.

Mr. David Hunt: The figure was 84,000 in autumn 1993, which is a fall of 7,000 on the previous autumn.

Part-time Workers

18. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department intends to respond to the House of Lords judgment on part-time workers' rights by giving them the same rights as full-time workers.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are carefully considering that judgment to ascertain its full implications and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

19. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of jobs in railway engineering in the United Kingdom; and what was the figure on 31 March 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: There were 14,400 employees in the railway industry in Great Britain in September 1991. Reliable estimates of change since then are not available.

Ellington Colliery

20. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional employment creation measures he plans following the redundancies resulting from the closure of Ellington colliery.

Miss Widdecombe: We have made available an additional £2·8 million to Northumberland training and enterprise council and the Employment Service for additional employment and training measures, as a consequence of the closure of Ellington colliery.

Domestic Violence

21. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to develop a national strategy to counter the effects of domestic violence on women.

Mr. David Hunt: A wide range of initiatives across Government has been taken in recent years to tackle domestic violence. These are directed towards ensuring that perpetrators are brought to justice; that victims receive the necessary material and emotional support and that steps are taken towards prevention in the long term. The ministerial group on domestic violence, which is led by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office, will be meeting to consider how proposals for further action can be taken forward.

Employer-employee Relations

22. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on employer-employee relations.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government believe that employer-employee relations are a matter for the employers and workers concerned. Our step-by-step reform of employment law has been a principal factor in achieving the dramatic improvement of this country's industrial relations record and reputation since 1979.

Unemployment (Rochdale)

24. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to visit Rochdale to discuss unemployment in that area.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State currently has no plans to visit Rochdale.

Access to Work

25. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has had to Government proposals for the "Access to Work" scheme for the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced details of "Access to Work" on 28 February 1994, Official Report, column 534. The changes have received an enthusiastic welcome.

Jobs Summit

26. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding the G7 jobs conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Before attending the G7 jobs conference I had meetings with the director general of the CBI and the general secretary of the TUC.

The G7 conference was a valuable conference about policies to achieve sustainable reductions in unemployment and increases in employment. The conference underlined the importance for all our countries of sound macro-economic policies to achieve sustainable growth, open and competitive economies to encourage innovation and enterprise, more flexible labour markets, improved education and training, and active employment policies to help and encourage unemployed people to get back to work. The jobs conference has ensured that each Government will learn more about the employment and training programmes of the others. Policies to reduce unemployment will be discussed by Heads of Government at the forthcoming G7 economic summit in Naples.

Maximum Working Week

27. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the costs to United Kingdom industry of a statutory maximum working week of 35 hours.

Mr. David Hunt: A compulsory 35-hour maximum working week would cost United Kingdom industry up to £20 billion in the first year alone. It would be disastrous for competitiveness, jobs and the economic recovery.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met small business representatives to discuss the working of TECs.

Mr. David Hunt: I regularly discuss training and enterprise councils with people from small businesses.

Airport Workers (Hearing)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will take steps to ensure that all airport workers are covered by health and safety legislation which adequately protects their hearing;

(2) what categories of airport workers are not covered by legislation to protect them against deafness, tinnitus and other industrial diseases involving their hearing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Noise at Work Regulations 1989, which came into effect on 1 January 1990, oblige employers to take steps to protect the hearing of all employees at work, including airport workers.

Multinational Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the EU's draft legislation to make EU multinationals set up cross-border machinery for informing employees of closures, collective redundancies and shifts of production from one country to another will apply to multinationals based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 15 April 1994, Official Report, column 346.

Working Hours

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current average hours of work of (a) blue collar workers, (b) white collar workers, (c) executives and (d) directors of firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the average hours paid at basic and overtime rates for full-time employees is published in table X3 of part A of the 1993 new earnings survey report. A copy of the report is available in the Library. The table provides information for manual and non-manual occupations. Executives and directors are classified as managers.

The result of the new earnings survey show that the average basic hours of full-time employees have been around 37·5 hours for the last three years. On average, the basic hours of work of manual employees are just under two hours more than those of non-manual workers.

In 1993, over two thirds of employees worked no paid overtime and the average was 2·3 hours a week.

Jobs Summit

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received during the G7 jobs summit in favour of measures which would increase non-wage labour costs.

Mr. David Hunt: At the end of the G7 jobs conference, United States Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen noted that we have to create the climate in which the corporate world has jobs for people. One of many encouraging features of this conference was the clear consensus that non-wage labour costs must be controlled, and where possible reduced, to improve employment prospects and help reduce unemployment.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 336, if he will list the firms of consultants employed by his Department in each of the last five years and the number of contracts they have undertaken.

The Attorney-General: The firms of consultants to which contracts have been awarded are listed in the table. Where more than one contract has been awarded to any firm this is indicated.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about military activity in Liberia; and how it is affecting the peace process and the delivery of humanitarian aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 15 April at column 330. Aid deliveries from Cote d'Ivoire and from Monrovia to the surrounding regions are uninterrupted, but interfactional fighting is affecting deliveries to south-east and south-western Liberia.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps UNDO in Somalia has taken to conduct a strategic appraisal of the infrastructure needs of Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The framework for planning Somalia's long-term reconstruction and development, prepared in December 1993 under World bank leadership and with United Nations development office participation, identified broad infrastructure needs throughout the country. UNDO has begun the detailed needs assessment process and carried out a preliminary assessment mission to Woquooyl Galbeed region in the north-west in March. The report will be discussed by the Somali aid co-ordinating body on 18 and 19 April.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans UNOSOM 2 has to devolve decision making to its office in Hargeisa; and how and when it proposes to deliver services and resources to north-west Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UNOSOM's Hargeisa office acts primarily as a liaison point for UNOSOM II operations in north-west Somalia. UNOSOM is mandated to assist with the development of programmes on demobilisation and disarmament, demining and the development of justice systems in north-west Somalia. Salaries for police and local mine clearance amounting to US$730,800 have been paid during the period January to April. We intend to raise the question of devolution of decision making to UNOSOM's Hargeisa office at the Somali aid co-ordinating body meeting on 18 and 19 April.

Natural Resources Institute

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his current plans for the future of the Natural Resources Institute.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 26 January at columns 272-73. The study of ownership options is continuing and no decision has yet been reached. Meanwhile, restructuring is in train.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) in which programmes staff, proposed for redundancy by the Natural Resources Institute in the course of 1994, are currently involved; and what the effect on these programmes of the proposed redundancies is expected to be;

(2) what aid projects and which developing countries benefit from the work done at the Natural Resources Institute on (a) oilseeds and (b) mycotoxins;

(3) how many staff at each grade the Natural Resources Institute proposes to make redundant in the course of 1994;

(4) what programmes of research are currently undertaken by the Natural Resources Institute; and how each programme will be affected by his plans for the institute's future development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Natural Resources Institute under its chief executive, Mr. Anthony Beattie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Beattie to Mr. Tom Clarke, dated 18 April 1994:

Mr. Lennox-Boyd has replied to the first of the five questions about NRI which you put down for written reply on 14 April. I have been asked to reply to the remainder. If I might take your questions in a slightly different order to that in which they were asked, dealing first with No. 79, the Institute is engaged in programmes of applied and adaptive research which, in line with the objectives of the Aid Programme and of ODA's Renewable Natural Resources Research Strategy, seek to help developing countries to improve the productivity and sustainable management of their natural resources. The Institute is presently undertaking research in some 13 programme areas as listed at Enclosure 1.

As an executive agency, NRI undertakes research on a customer-contractor basis and its activities are accordingly shaped by the requirements of its clients, notably ODA and other major aid agencies. The priorities of these clients are bound to change over time and this will be reflected in the pattern of demand for the Institute's services. Thus it is not so much a question of how plans for future development will affect a pre-determined set of research activities, but rather how the Institute can best be adapted to respond flexibly and effectively to the changing requirements of its clients.

You have asked specifically (No. 72) what aid projects and which developing countries benefit from work done here on oilseeds and mycotoxins. Details are provided in Enclosure 2.

More generally, you have asked (No. 78) how many staff, by grade, are proposed for redundancy in 1994, which areas of work they are involved in and what the effect on existing programmes will be.

Under a programme of staff reductions announced earlier this year a total of 49 posts have been abolished. A breakdown by grade is at Enclosure 3. As individual members of staff are likely to contribute to more than one programme of research I have provided a breakdown by a broad strategy area rather than specific research programme. Details in response to question No. 70 are also at Enclosure 3. In all but six cases, this reduction in staff numbers has been achieved by voluntary means. It is likely that further reductions will be needed in due course, but the scale and timing of these have still to be determined.

The staff reduction programme is based on a careful analysis of the skills available at NRI and developing patterns of demand for these skills. As mentioned above our concern is with adapting the skill-base to match demand. This is essential if we are to continue to meet the needs of our clients and to maintain the Institute's reputation as a multi-disciplinary centre of excellence in a competitive and evolving field of activity.

I should of course be glad to provide any further information you may require.

Areas of research in which NRI is presently engaged, grouped by strategy area:

Resource Assessment and Farming Systems

Resource assessment
Agronomy and cropping systems
Livestock production
Forestry
Socio-economics

Integrated Pest Management

Pest management for annual and perennial crops
Component technologies for pest management
Adaptive research in integrated pest management
Biological systems and functional variability

Food Science and Crop Utilisation

Horticulture and tree crops
Food security in cereals and pulses
Fisheries and aquatic resources
Forest products, oilseeds, edible nuts and fibres

NRI's work on oilseeds and mycotoxins

INTRODUCTION

NRI's work on oilseeds and mycotoxins spans a wide range of activities and benefits, both directly and indirectly, many developing countries. It is principally funded by ODA's Natural Resources Research Department and feeds into bilateral and multi-lateral development programmes. The following is a synopsis of activities which have been carried out over the last year or so.

Oilseeds

The focus of work has been principally on the two priority commodities of ODA's Renewable Natural Resources Research Strategy: groundnuts and coconuts. Total expenditure in 1993-94 from all funding sources was approximately £325,000.

Advisory and representation

In the last year over 240 inquiries were received from 36 countries on oilseeds processing and utilisation, mainly from Latin America, Africa and Asia. Several international conferences were attended and research and development findings disseminated.

Training

In 1993 eight personnel from Ghana, Indonesia, Morocco, Peru, The Philippines, Sri Lanka and Turkey were trained in various aspects of oilseeds, oils and fats.

PROJECT ACTIVITIES

Agronomic, pest control and plant pathology:

assisting in improving oilseeds production at the Lumle and Pakribas Agricultural Centres in Nepal; a study on oilseeds in mixed cropping systems in lowland tropical forest margins;
a pest control manual for groundnuts (China, India and other producing countries);
work on lethal yellowing and wilt disorder of coconuts (Zanzibar and West Africa); collaboration with CGIAR in India on groundnut rosette virus and vector control.

Processing and development:

stemming from socio-economic, marketing and technical studies, the introduction of new and improved methods of small-scale processing of oilseeds mainly in rural areas, with particular emphasis on smallholder farmers, traders and gender issues (Tanzania, The Gambia, Ghana, Zimbabwe, India, Sri Lanka, Brazil, Indonesia, Solomon Islands). This work is part-funded by the United Nations' Common Fund for Commodities; development of analytical techniques, and training in product analysis and quality control, including trade assessments.

Mycotoxins

Over the past year the control of mycotoxins in foods and feeds has been pursued at NRI through some nineteen projects. The range of commodities studied includes cereals, oilseeds, edible nuts, spices and livestock feeds from numerous countries. Total expenditure from all funding sources in 1993-94 was approximately £375,000.

Advisory and representation

Over 130 enquiries were received from 30 countries on mycotoxins over the last year, mainly from Asia, Africa and Latin America. Staff attended several international conferences to disseminate information and served on several United Kingdom and EC Committees dealing with mycotoxins.

Training

In 1993 four analysts from Brazil, Philippines and Saudi Arabia were trained in mycotoxin analysis.

PROJECT ACTIVITIES

The Institute's mycotoxins work involves the establishment, of Mycotoxin Centres in developing countries, with fully equipped and trained personnel; and the utilisation of these Centres in the identification and control of mycotoxin contamination, using multi-disciplinary teams.

Centres have been established in Pakistan, India, Thailand and Philippines. This approach is supported by a research programme which focuses upon the development of methods (sampling and analysis) for the surveillance of mycotoxins and the development and testing of control (including chemical detoxification) procedures.

Work carried out over the last year includes:

studies on sampling procedures for monitoring bulk shipments of livestock feed ingredients and on methods for the analysis of moulds and mycotoxins in a variety of foods and feeds. The findings assist in the formulation of quality standards and legislation. This work has been partly funded by the EC and MAFF;
a study of the effect of commercial chemical detoxification procedures on the transmission of mycotoxins into milk;
setting up a Mycotoxin Centre in Bangladesh;
establishing a strategy for the quality control of pistachio nuts in Turkey; surveillance studies in Honduras, Bangladesh and Pakistan.

Gambia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have been taken either bilaterally by the Overseas Development Administration or multilaterally through the European Union to promote the development of coastal fishing resources in the Gambia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Between 1979 and 1991 the European development fund provided 5·66 mecu—£4·4 million, of which the United Kingdom share was £0·72 million to develop marine artisanal fisheries in six Atlantic coastal villages.

Multilateral Agencies (Aid)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what mechanisms are in place to influence the deployment of funds provided by the United Kingdom to (a) the European bank for reconstruction and development, (b) the European Union, (c) the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations and (d) the World bank; and what further steps are planned to increase the accountability of those organisations to the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For the European bank for reconstruction and development, the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations and the World bank, the United Kingdom participates actively in meetings where overall policy priorities and work programmes are discussed. For the European Union we play a full part in discussion of development policy issues in the Council of the Union, and in discussion of project proposals in European Commission management committees. We also maintain regular contact with the senior management of all these institutions. We will continue to work through these mechanisms to strengthen their efficiency and accountability.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to continue to support economic and political reform in Africa under the third phase of the special programme of assistance for sub-Saharan Africa co-ordinated by the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have pledged to commit up to £300 million under the World bank's SPA III programme over the three years 1994-95 to 1997-98. These funds will be available to poor, debt-distressed African countries, selected by Her Majesty's Government, which are adhering to an IMF/IBRD-endorsed economic reform programme, and are pursuing good government policies.

DEFENCE

Battle Tank Khalid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which year the battle tank Khalid was first marketed; and if he will make a statement on its application.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the company concerned.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent of 25 March, Official Report, columns 471-72, regarding protection against chemical and germ warfare, if he will estimate the cost of (a) protective clothing and equipment, (b) anti-contamination equipment and (c) medical counter measures against chemical and biological attacks during the period April 1990 to April 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The expenditure incurred on clothing and equipment to protect against chemical and biological attack during the period April 1990 to April 1992 is set out in the table.

	£ million
Protective clothing	26·5
Protective equipment	18·4
Detection equipment	24·6
Decontamination equipment	0·9
Total	70·4

As previously advised in response to the hon. Member's questions of 12 July 1993, Official Report, column 366, 19 July 1993, Official Report, column 87 and 26 July 1993, Official Report, column 744, details relating to medical counter-measures against chemical and biological attacks are classified.

PINDAR Bunker

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the equipment installed in the PINDAR bunker.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of the equipment installed in the PINDAR bunker was approximately £60,000,000. The cost of the systems includes hardware, software development, software, documentation, testing and installation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual running cost of the PINDAR bunker.

Mr. Hanley: The average cost of the PINDAR bunker including staff costs, maintenance and support is £7,320,000.

Submarine Nuclear Reactor Cores

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with the nuclear transport licensing authorities regarding the temporary use of commercial containers to transport used submarine nuclear reactor cores.

Mr. Aitken: The contract to procure two commercial containers to transport used submarine nuclear reactor cores requires the contractor to provide the containers fully licensed for the purpose required. As such the request and approval of a licence is a matter between the contractor and the nuclear licensing authority.

Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what functions the A45 building at Aldermaston will carry out once the A90 building is fully operational.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our general policy to disclose details of the role and function of individual buildings at Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston. Howevever, manufacture of a variety of components and assemblies not being transferred to building A90 will continue to be produced in A45.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the radiation leak at AWE Aldermaston on 24 March.

Mr. Aitken: On 24 March 1994 during planned maintenance in a laboratory a quantity of radioactive material was disturbed. Monitoring of protective clothing worn by the two individuals involved revealed that there was slight radioactive contamination on their overshoes. Subsequent monitoring by AWE medical staff has confirmed that the two individuals received radiation dose levels equivalent to a small fraction of the annual permissible dose limit. External monitoring outside the building has confirmed that there was no release of radioactive material into the environment. As part of normal procedure the Health and Safety Executive has been informed.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last full safety assessment of the A45 building at Aldermaston was made.

Mr. Aitken: The safety of all buildings at AWE Aldermaston, including A45, is under constant review. A full safety assessment of building A45 was conducted in late 1988 and further safety reviews of the facility have been carried out at regular intervals.

Ammunition

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use has been made by United Kingdom forces since 1981, of 155 mm ammunition rounds.

Mr. Hanley: There are two types of 155 mm ammunition currently in use with the British Army. They are the United States designed M107 and the European designed—United Kingdom/Germany/Italy–L15. Although records of usage are not available for the period in question, it is estimated that some 44,000 L15 rounds have been used since 1990 and some 223,000 M107 rounds since 1985.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British tank forces use 105 mm and 120 mm rounds.

Mr. Hanley: No, to the former; yes, to the latter.

Service Pensions

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost to public funds which would be incurred by uprating all service pensions in payment to the level of such pensions awarded today.

Mr. Hanley: The information which would be necessary to make this calculation is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at inordinate cost.

Optical Surveillance Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether satellite and related optical surveillance technology represents a strategic national security interest.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

David Hart

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether David Hart has any access to (a) confidential papers and (b) facilities and resources of his Department.

Mr. Hanley: Mr. David Hart is one of a number of advisors from outside the Ministry of Defence who provide informal advice to the Secretary of State, and who are involved in the work of the defence cost study. These outsiders may see classified papers under strictly controlled arrangements where this is directly relevant to the work they are doing. Such advisors have no independent call on the facilities and resources of the Department, although they do discuss matters with Departmental officials.

Offset Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if projects approved as part of the offset programme are subject to export licence, COCOM and missile technology control regime controls.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates delegations to Saudi Arabia were organised by the Offset Office; and if he will list the members of those delegations.

Mr. Aitken: The British Offset Office has arranged two high-level visits to Saudi Arabia to promote Al Yamamah Offset. The members of the first delegation, which visited from 16-21 February 1990, were:

Mr. Roy Allen	ICI
Mr. Cedric Brown	British Gas
Sir James Craig	Saudi British Bank
Mr. Alec Daly	GKN
Sir Ronald Grierson	GEC
Mr. George Moody-Stuart	Booker Tate
Mr. Alan Nickalls	NEI International Ltd.
Mr. Gilbert Phillips	Pilkington
Mr. Michael Rouse	British Aerospace
Mr. Richard Turner	STC

The second delegation visited from 3 to 9 May 1991. Its members were:

Mr. Richard Barnes	British Aerospace
Mr. Tony Belisario	Dowty Defence and Air Systems
Mr. Antony Bruce	John Brown
The Hon. David Douglas-Home	Morgan Grenfell International
Mr. John Elliott	Burmah Castrol
Mr. John Hill	Wessex Water
Mr. John Lawrence	Thorn Security
Mr. Jake Stewart	British Steel
Dr. Brian Tempest	Glaxo
Mr. Damien Turner	British Aerospace
Mr. Peter Usher	Vosper Thornycroft UK

In addition the British Offset Office organises ad hoc visits to Saudi Arabia for companies as required.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the membership of the British Offset Committee in each year that committee has existed, together with the principal business interest of the private sector members.

Mr. Aitken: The Al Yamamah Offset Committee met for the first time in March 1987. Its members were:

Chairman
Sir Colin Chandler—Head of Defence Export Services, MOD

Members
The Hon. David Douglas-Home—(Morgan Grenfell International Ltd) representing COMET—Mr. Alan Titchener
DTI—Dr. Maurice Dixson—British Aerospace
Dr. David Mitchell—Rolls Royce
Mr. Philip Curry—MOD

The following changes to membership took place at subsequent meetings.

December 1987
Mr. John Weston (British Aerospace) replaced Dr. Dixson.
Mr. Colin Craig (Schroder Asseily) joined the Committee; Mr. Curry (MOD) left the Committee.

September 1988
Mr. Ian Dixon (DTI) replaced Mr. Titchener.
Mr. Richard Spink (FCO) joined the Committee.

February 1990
Sir Alan Thomas (MOD) replaced Sir Colin Chandler.
The Hon. David Gore-Booth (MOD) joined the Committee.
Mr. Michael Rouse (BAe) replaced Mr. Weston.
Mr. Petter (DTI) replaced Mr. Dixon.

May 1991
Mr. Michael Janner (MOD) replaced Mr. Richard Spink.

April 1992
Mr. Damien Turner (British Aerospace) replaced Mr. Rouse.

September 1992
Mr. John Hill (Saudi British Bank) replaced The Hon. David Douglas-Home as representative of COMET.

May 1993
Dr. Noel Brehony (Rolls Royce) replaced Dr. Mitchell.

December 1993
Mr. Ian Cliff (DTI) replaced Mr. Petter.
Mr. David Hewitson (British Aerospace) replaced Mr. Turner.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the projects (a) approved and (b) commenced under the offset office programme.

Mr. Aitken: Projects currently approved, but not yet commenced, under the Al Yamamah offset programme are:

Missile Engineering Facility
Rolls Royce participation in the Middle East Propulsion Company
Oil seed manufacture
Materials handling systems
Lightweight marble and granite manufacture
Water treatment equipment

In addition, the following projects have commenced implementation:

Glaxo pharmaceutical plant
Tate and Lyle sugar refinery
Vocational training facility
British Aerospace participation in Aircraft Accessories and Components Company (AACC)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what links exist between the Offset Office and the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and whether approval under the offset programme is always accompanied by Export Credits Guarantee Department approval.

Mr. Aitken: No special links exist between the Al Yamamah Offset Office and the Export Credits Guarantee Department. Cover arrangements are a matter for ECGD and participants in individual projects.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department set up an Offset Office for Saudi Arabia; and what the costs of this office have been in each succeeding year.

Mr. Aitken: The British Offset Office was set up in 1987. It forms part of the Saudi Armed Forces Project Office in the Ministry of Defence, the costs of which are met by the Government of Saudi Arabia.

Falkland Islands Flights

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the flights on which seats were for sale to civilians to and from the Falkland Islands in 1992 and 1993 and to date in 1994, and which arrived either at RAF Mount Pleasant or at RAF Brize Norton more than two hours late.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is available only for flights into RAF Mount Pleasant, and is as follows:

	1992	1993	[1]1994
Number of flights with seats for sale to civilians	92	80	21
Number delayed by two hours or more	23	13	5

[1] To date.

Information on the number of flights from the Falkland Islands arriving at RAF Brize Norton more than two hours late is not recorded centrally and figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Because of the length of the route, the unpredictable weather in the Falkland Islands and the limitations of en-route services such as air traffic control, a greater level of delays can be expected on the United Kingdom to Falkland Islands route than on many more widely used routes.

IMS Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records are maintained of the business activities of former employees of International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Conditions and Allowances Review

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings he envisages will be made through the review of conditions and allowances in the armed forces.

Mr. Hanley: As is made clear in the terms of reference for this independent review, set out in my answer to the hon. Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 30 March, Official Report, columns 752-53, the primary purpose is not cost cutting but to ensure that we have structures appropriate to the needs of the services in the 21st century. No estimate has therefore been made of the scope for any savings but the independent review is, naturally, also required to identify the resource implications of its proposals and to seek to contribute to the reduction over the longer term of the overall resource cost of manpower.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what external consultancies will be assisting in the review of conditions and allowances in the armed forces.

Mr. Hanley: A minor consultancy to advise on the scope of the independent review of service career and manpower structures and terms and conditions of service, and on the interrelationships between the different aspects of the review, has already reported. The matter of what further consultancy assistance may be required is primarily one for the review chairman, but my Department is making arrangements to ensure that such assistance can be commissioned at short notice as and when requirements are identified.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what opportunities will exist for United Kingdom citizens including serving or former members of the armed forces involved in Operation Granby in the Gulf war in 1991, to claim for damages for deleterious health effects from the United Nations Compensation Committee.

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations Compensation Commission—UNCC—will consider, against established criteria, claims from United Kingdom citizens suffering from deleterious health effects directly caused by Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait between 2 August 1990 and 2 March 1991. It will require evidence to show that there is a direct causative link between the symptoms of the claimant and the Gulf conflict.

This right to claim extends to members of the allied coalition armed forces, who were prisoners of war and whose loss or injury resulted from mistreatment in violation of the international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 1949. Most of the British prisoners of war held captive during the Gulf conflict have put in claims, as have members of the British liaison team, and their dependents, who were in Kuwait at the time of the invasion.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to reply to the letter from CND which was handed in following the demonstration on 15 March at Porton Down; and if he will place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Ken Livingstone, dated 19 April 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when he intends to reply to the letter from CND which was handed in following the demonstration on 15 March 1994 at Porton Down has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.
2. There was no demonstration at Porton Down on 15 March 1994 when two representatives of the Salisbury Branch of CND visited the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on 16 March 1994 to mark the anniversary of the use of chemical weapons on the civilian population of Hallabja. They were invited into the Establishment and handed over a letter dated 16 March 1994 addressed to myself as Director General.
3. I replied to the letter on 8 April 1994 and am making arrangements for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Gulf Trust

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current amount of money in the Gulf Trust; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria are used to determine whether or not payments are made from the Gulf Trust; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much money was received and paid out by the Gulf Trust in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92, (c 1992-93 and (d) 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what consideration he has given to seeking to alter the criteria under which payments are made from the Gulf Trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Contractors

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan), Official Report, columns 473-74, if he will list those contractors that have quality management system certifications which have been (a) subject to assessment by his Department or (b) can be shown to be acceptable to the corresponding ministry in another NATO country.

Mr. Aitken: Approximately 1,000 United Kingdom defence contractors hold quality system certification following assessment by MOD. They are listed in the "United Kingdom Register of Quality Assessed Companies" maintained and issued by the Department of Trade and Industry. The DTI register also identifies those United Kingdom contractors who hold quality system certification granted by third party certification bodies holding appropriate accreditation from the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies.

Each NATO MOD is responsible for identifying contractors with acceptable quality management systems, details of which are available to United Kingdom MOD, on request.

Rwanda

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent his staff have been involved in United Nations contingency planning for United Nations sanctioned operations in Rwanda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Ministry of Defence staff have not been involved in United Nations contingency planning sanctioned operations in Rwanda.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with (a) his NATO counterparts, and (b) his UN counterparts relating to the situation in Rwanda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not had any discussions with either his NATO or UN counterparts relating to the situation in Rwanda.

Airworks plc

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems have arisen in the contract awarded to Airworks plc to fit defensive systems to Hercules aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Varying degrees of minor repairable damage was caused to 11 Hercules aircraft; rectification will be complete shortly, at the contractor's expense, and no long-term operational or airworthiness concerns are likely to arise from this problem.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number and nature of current contracts his Department has with Airworks plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department currently has some 41 contracts with Airworks plc. Details of the subject matter of all those contracts are not held centrally. However, the company is recognised as a supplier of a wide range of services, such as repair, maintenance, modification and ancillary tasks, in support of aircraft, rotorcraft, simulators and training aids, radio, radar, electronics, avionics and test equipment.

Recruitment Targets

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out for each service the annual targets for recruitment in 1993-94 of officers and other ranks and the extent to which these targets have been achieved.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 14 February 1994]: The recruiting targets for the year ending 5 April 1994, and achievements in recruitment up to January 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, are as follows:

	Target	Achieved	Percentage achieved
Royal Navy Officers
Officers	478	285	60
Other ranks	1,439	928	64
Army
Officers	1,005	664	65
Other ranks	8,992	6,702	75
Royal Air Force
Officers	328	235	72
Other ranks	696	537	77

Territorial Army

Mr. Braizier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the Territorial Army to contribute to operational commitments undertaken by the regular Army.

Mr. Rifkind: Further to my announcement of 17 June 1993, Official Report, columns 1009-11, we plan to deploy a Territorial Army platoon in support of the regular Army in the Falkland Islands from July to November this year and a TA company as part of the Falkland Islands garrison from March to July next year. Both deployments will represent a pilot scheme to test the use of the TA in this way and will, if successful, facilitate the wider use of our volunteer reserves in circumstances short of war.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 20 April 1994

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held in police cells in England and Wales at the latest date available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Lynne Jones, dated 20 April 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners being held in police cells in England and Wales.

On 17 April 1994, the latest date for which complete information is available, 315 prisoners were held in police cells in England and Wales.

Crime Statistics

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences were reported to the police in each of the last five years involving sexual abuse or serious ill treatment of children aged under 16 years by stepfathers or men cohabiting with the child's mother.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

"Police Stop" Video

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what reasons he has been given for actuality film of police car chases being supplied by local police forces to the commercial producers of the video "Police Stop"; and what form of payment was made for this transaction;

(2) when the hon. Member for Hartlepool can expect to receive a reply to his letter of 21 March concerning the co-operation given by the police in the commercial production of the video "Police Stop";

(3) if he will request local police forces in future to stop providing film footage of police car chases and crashes to commercial video producers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and noble Friend Lord Ferrers replied to the hon. Member's letter on 13 April. The supply of informaiton from police records, including video material, is an operational matter which is for the discretion of individual chief officers of police. The traffic committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers has take a close interest in the issue and will be considering it in full when the committee meets on 11 May. I understand that the information was supplied for the purpose of promoting road safety and that none of the police forces concerned received money for the supply of footage.

Passports

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take measures to allow British citizens to continue to use a United Kingdom rather than a European passport if they so wish.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Old-style British passports remain valid until their normal date of expiry, but are then replaced by new-style British passports which are machine readable and in a common format agreed with our European Community partners. We have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Car Crime

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps the Home Office is taking to reduce car crime, with particular reference to new initiatives taken within the last six months;

(2) what estimates the Home Office has regarding the likely incidence of car crime in 1994-95 and 1995-96;

(3) how many police hours were committed nationally to covering incidents of vehicle crime in each year since 1990;

(4) what was the estimated cost to British car owners of vehicle crime in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office is continuing its car crime prevention campaign in 1994, with both media advertising and behind the scenes activities designed to reduce the opportunities for this type of crime.

In addition, the advisory committee on car crime prevention has now been brought under the auspices of the national board as a working group and continues to look at devising new ways of improving vehicle security. We are also continuing to promote the secured car parks initiative and I urged major car park operators to participate in the scheme when I met them on 2 February to discuss car park security.

It is not possible to estimate what the likely incidence of car crime will be in 1994-95 and 1995-96, but I am pleased to be able to report that vehicle crime as a whole went down by almost 2 per cent. in 1993. I hope that this downward trend will continue.

Information as to how many police hours were committed nationally to covering incidents of car crime in each year since 1990 is not available.

Similarly, information as to the estimated cost of vehicle crime to British car owners over the same period is not available in the form requested. However, the British Crime Survey found that in 1991 the net losses to victims of all types of thefts involving cars was somewhere in the region of £775 million, excluding insurance and security costs.

Parish Constables

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of Sate for the Home Department what was the total cost of advertising and promoting the parish constable initiative incurred by his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There has bneen no formal advertising or promotional activity. The parish constables initiative was promoted through exchanges between the Home Office and police forces and parish councils in the course of normal business.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources his Department has provided to fund the provision of parish constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 18 April at columns 352-54.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from councils to provide funding for the provision of parish constables; and what has been his response.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The only representations of this kind that have been received from parish councils have suggested that the special constables serving as parish special constables, or the members of the public serving as wardens, should be paid either by the state or out of council funds. In the case of parish special constables, this would be contrary to the tradition of the special constabulary. Special constables volunteer their time and are not paid, although they receive allowances and out-of-pocket expenses for their hours of duty. This has not proved an obstacle to take-up of the initiative. More than 40 schemes are now up and running.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions to his Department in the last five years have not been answered because of disproportionate costr j 2-6 or because the information requested was not held centrally; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Howard: The number of answers given to questions to my Department in the five calendar years 1989-93 which the POLIS database has been able to identify as fitting the hon. Member's criteria is 479. Information on how many of these questions could now be answered and details of the questions and the hon. Members who tabled them could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police, North Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been (a) the establishment and (b) the number of police officers in post in North Yorkshire on 1 April 1974 and on the same date each year since then up to and including 1 April 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on police strength is collected at the end of each month. The figures set out in the table give the information requested as at 30 April in each year. Data for April 1994 are not yet available.

Establishment and strength of the North Yorkshire police from 1974 to 1994

Years as at 30 April	Establishment	Strength
1974	1,277	1,183
1975	1,277	1,246
1976	1,328	1,309
1977	1,328	1,294
1978	1,328	1,271
1979	1,328	1,337

Polling Booths (Disabled Access)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new steps he is taking to ensure that disabled persons have full access to polling booths during local, national and European elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We regularly remind local authorities and returning officers about their obligation to choose, wherever possible, buildings which provide access for the disabled, and we have included further advice in our guidance for acting returning officers at the forthcoming European parliamentary elections. This matter is also being considered as part of our post-election review.

Temazepam

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases of violent crime abuse of the drug Temazepam has been found to be a factor in the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reschedule the drug Temazepam in capsule and tablet form; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office carried out a public consultation exercise on this proposal last year. The advisory council subsequently considered the responses to this consultation, and I am currently considering the council's conclusions in consultation with ministerial colleagues. I plan to reach a decision shortly.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people from Bosnia have sought refugee status; and how many have been granted this in each year since 1992;

(2) how many people from Bosnia are currently living in the United Kingdom because of insecurity in their homeland; and if he will give a breakdown of their current status regarding their right to stay.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answers 19 April 1994]: The available information on asylum applications by nationals of the former Yugoslavia, and on decisions made, for the period 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1994 are given in the attached table; data for Bosnians are not separately identifiable in the statistics. The large majority of applications made in the period are under consideration and the applicants are being allowed to remain in the meantime.

In addition to consideration of asylum applications, the Government have, under arrangements announced in November 1992 and June 1993, offered to receive 1,000 particularly vulnerable individuals from the former Yugoslavia, and their close dependants, an estimated total of 4,000 people in all. As at 12 April 1994, 626 particularly vulnerable individuals and 849 dependants had arrived under these arrangements. Prior to this, 68 sick and wounded ex-detainees from Bosnia arrived in September 1992.

Decisions[1] on applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom from nationals of the former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1994

[2]Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.
[3]Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the period.
[4]Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.
[5]For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview to establish identity (para. 101 prior to 26 July 1993).
[6]Refused on the grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.

TREASURY

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations led him to apply differential treatment to individual and district heating systems in regard to the levying of VAT on domestic fuel.

Sir John Cope: There is no special VAT treatment for supplies of heat made under a district heating scheme. However, where landlords supply their tenants with heat under such a scheme and make a flat rate charge for both accommodation and heat then, in VAT terms, there is only a single supply of heated accommodation. In such cases the VAT liability of this single supply will be determined by the principal element, the accommodation. This has always been the position and follows established VAT supply principles.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the extent to which value added tax will be charged on any fuel used before 1 April, in bills sent out shortly after 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: There are transitional arrangements that enable suppliers to apportion bills so that VAT is charged only on gas and electricity calculated as used after the new rate came into force.

Bank Notes (Design)

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the design, size and colouring of £10 or £20 notes.

Sir John Cope: The design of Bank of England banknotes is the responsibility of the Bank. I understand that it has no plans to make any further changes to the £10 and £20 notes. New versions with clearer numerals were introduced last year. The size differences have been maintained in order to help the blind and partially-sighted. The colours are predominantly different, especially in the bold coloured symbols and around the portraits on the reverse of the notes.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration is given when introducing new bank notes to the needs of the blind and the elderly.

Sir John Cope: Design of Bank of England bank notes is the responsibility of the Bank of England. The Bank consults representatives of the blind, the partially sighted and the elderly about the design. In the light of advice from these groups, the Bank has maintained differences in the heights and widths for each denomination in the new series of notes and introduced a different bold coloured symbol on the front of each note to assist the partially sighted.

Trinidad Terms

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the countries which have benefited to date from the Trinidad terms; if he will specify for each of these countries how much debt has been written off in total, and how much has been written off by the United Kingdom; if he will list the countries which will be coming up for debt relief under the Trinidad terms in the near future; and if he will indicate which countries have started negotiating the second stage of their Trinidad terms agreement.

Mr. Nelson: To date, 22 countries have benefited from a reduction in the burden of their official bilateral debt under Trinidad terms. They are: Benin, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Cote D'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea Republic, Guyana, Honduras, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda, Vietnam and Zambia.

Figures for the debts owed to individual creditors, or the debts cancelled for any individual country are confidential. We cannot publish these figures without the consent of the authorities in both the debtor and creditor countries. But in total, it is estimated that over the lifetime of these agreements over $7¼ billion of debt will be restructured and around $2¾ billion will be forgiven. The United Kingdom's share of the debt and debt service forgiven is estimated to be over $200 million. However, such estimates are liable to revision since, for several of the debtor countries, discussions over the detailed terms are still underway.

The merits of all future requests for debt rescheduling will be considered by the Paris Club creditors on a case by case basis. Thus it is not possible to say which countries might obtain debt relief under Trinidad terms in the future. As yet, no countries have begun negotiating for reductions of their stock of official bilateral debts with the Paris Club.

EC Central Bank

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the recent meeting of EC finance ministers with EC central bank governors.

Sir John Cope: EC central bank Governors were invited to the informal meeting of EC Economic and Finance Ministers held in Greece on 9 April. The main item of discussion was follow-up work to the Commission's White Paper on "Growth, Competitiveness and Employment." As is the practice for informal meetings of this sort, there were no formal Council conclusions.

VAT Registration Fraud

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount saved or collected due to uncovering of value added tax registration fraud due to local knowledge of local registration staff in each constituency in England and Wales.

Sir John Cope: False VAT registration by bogus business for the purpose of obtaining false VAT repayments is treated as criminal fraud. Of the reported cases, Customs are unable to identify how many were detected specifically as the result of local knowledge of registration staff in local VAT offices.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

British National Party

Mr. Shore: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has received a report from the Metropolitan police into the alleged electoral malpractices of the British National party in leaflets put out in Millwall on the 1 October 1992 and 16 September 1993 local by-elections; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has been kept informed of the progress of the Metropolitan police inquiries following a complaint made by the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw). The investigation is continuing and the CPS expects to receive a report when it is concluded.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Computer Error, Benefits Agency

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people not in receipt of severe disablement premium because of computer error by the Benefits Agency; how long this problem has existed; what is being done to rectify it; what efforts are being made to trace those concerned; what his Department's policy is towards backdating payments to the date when entitlement commenced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Jamie Cann, Dated 19 April 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in which you enquire about suggestions that Benefits Agency customers with entitlement to a severe disability premium (SDP) have not received it due to a computer error.

I would first of all like to explain that the problem did not arise from a fault with the Income Support Computer System (ISCS). It has always been possible to include the SDP in system produced payments of Income Support if entitlement existed. The problem arose because the complexity of the criteria necessitated staff making further enquiries in cases with potential entitlement.

This was because it was not possible to obtain all of the information to determine entitlement on the intial Income Support claim form; inclusion of all the relevant questions would have increased its size and complexity unacceptably, particularly for the majority of customers from whom the information was not required.

Inevitably potential entitlement was sometimes overlooked, further enquiries were not always made and as a result some awards of the SDP missed.

In order to improve the initial consideration of claims a change was introduced to the ISCS on 13 December 1993. It will now identify a case with potential entitlement to the SDP as claim details are entered and issue an appropriate enquiry to the customer, removing the need for staff to do this. Similarly, potential entitlement is also identified when reviewing existing cases.

Corrective action has been taken on all cases identified and full areas have been considered and paid as appropriate. Arrears are considered for any past period since 1988 when the premium was introduced, in cases where the award of the SDP was appropriate.

We are considering what further action may be necessary to establish the extent of the problem and identify any further cases which may not have been correctly awarded the SDP. If any are identified enquiries will be made before they are referred to the adjudicating authorities who will consider whether, and from when, the SDP can be paid.

I should explain that all claims to social security benefits are decided in the first instance by an Adjudication Officer who applies statute and caselaw to a customers circumstances before making a decision about entitlement. If a person disagrees with their decisions they have the right of appeal to the Independant Tribunal Service. There is a further right of appeal, but only on a point of law, to the Social Security Commissioners.

These authorities, appointed in consequence of an Act of Parliament, are independant of both the Department of Social Security and the Benefits Agency. Consequently no Government Minister or official can comment on their decisions or intervene in matters for which they are responsible.

I hope that you find this reply helpful.

Appeal Tribunals

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to remove legislative barriers to improved handling of appeals to social security appeal tribunals, disability appeal tribunals and medical appeal tribunals.

Mr. Hague: Amendments to the social security adjudication regulations have been laid today to make a number of changes which will streamline the handling of appeals by the independent tribunal service. The main purpose of these minor and technical amendments is to ensure that before a date is arranged for an appeal hearing all necessary preliminary work can be completed.

Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average value of weekly state pension paid (a) four weeks in arrears and (b) 13 weeks in arrears.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the population of working age in Britain is (a) currently contributing to the state earnings-related pension scheme or (b) currently opted out of SERPS and is earning above the national insurance minimum contributions level.

Mr. Hague: During 1991-92, the latest date for which information is available, of the population of working age in Great Britain with earnings above the national insurance lower earnings level:

(a) 15·4 per cent. paid national insurance contributions to count towards the state earnings-related pension scheme;

(b) 34·2 per cent. were contracted out of SERPS, including those who are members of an appropriate personal pension scheme;

(c) 3 per cent. worked in both contracted in and contracted out employments.

Source: 1 per cent. sample of the national insurance recording system and Office of Population Censuses and Surveys mid-1992 population estimates.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners receive their state pension via automated credit transfer (a) four weeks in arrears and (b) 13 weeks in arrears.

Mr. Hague: At March this year, an estimated 2,550,000 pensioners received their state pension by automated credit transfer four weekly in arrears; and an estimated 85,000 received their state pension by automated credit transfer 13-weekly in arrears.

Benefits (Habitual Residence Test)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 164, what views his Department's legal advisers have expressed on his proposals applying an habitual residence test to the payment of benefit.

Mr. Hague: The Department's legal advisers believe that the proposals are in accordance with Community law.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Aero-engine Development

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what analysis he has undertaken into the relative Government support received by Rolls-Royce, Pratt and Witney and General Electric concerning aero-engine development.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United States aero-engine industry receives no direct financial support from the United States Government. However, indirect support, primarily from NASA and the Department of Defence for research and development, is estimated by the United Kingdom industry to be approximately $760 million per annum. Due in part to the high level of indirect support provided by the United States Government to its aircraft industry, the United Kingdom has been seeking a new GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft to provide strict and fair limits on all classes of Government support for the aerospace industry.

Currently Rolls-Royce receives around £5 million under a number of DTI schemes. The Ministry of Defence, including the Defence Research Agency, currently spends around £51 million with Rolls-Royce on aero-engine research technology demonstration and development contracts.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of repayments of launch aid have been made by Rolls-Royce to the Exchequer in each year since 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: Launch aid repayments made by Rolls-Royce for each year since 1986 are as follows:

Year	£ million
1986-87	22·2
1987-88	25·2
1988-89	21·5
1989-90	31·9
1990-91	17·3
1991-92	27·3
1992-93	33·6

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much Government assistance has been given to Rolls-Royce since 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approximately £196 million has been provided to Rolls-Royce under a number of schemes since 1986.

Fireworks

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many firework-related injuries were referred to hospitals in the period around 5 November 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: According to reports from accident and emergency units in hospitals in England, Wales and Scotland, 1,058 people required treatment for injuries caused by fireworks, an increase of 12 per cent. over the total number of injuries reported in 1992.

A breakdown of the figures for 1993 and for the previous four years by region, type of injury and kind of firework involved is being placed today in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Virtually half the injuries were due to illegal misuse of fireworks in the streets or public places—338—and to sparklers—189. Injuries in the 16 to 20-year age group were 12 per cent. lower than in 1992.

Notwithstanding annual average sales of 100 million fireworks, I remain concerned at the number of firework injuries.

My Department is in touch with representatives of the fireworks industry and of enforcement authorities to discuss ways in which firework injuries can be reduced.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the ECGD will become a next steps agency.

Mr. Heseltine: ECGD's status has recently been reviewed as part of the Government's ongoing next steps programme. In the light of this Ministers have concluded that ECGD's current status as a separate Government Department remains best suited, in present circumstances, to the achievement of its aims and objectives. This conclusion reflects, in part, the continuing high level of ministerial involvement in ECGD's business. The circumstances bearing on this conclusion will be considered again in three years' time to determine whether there has been any material change which would justify a further formal status review.

Coal Industry (Mine Plans)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current location of the abandoned mine plans for the Northumberland, Durham and Cumberland coalfields.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that British Coal holds abandoned mine plans, on behalf of the Health and Safety Executive, at Bretby in Staffordshire.

Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether consultants retained by him on the review of the Warren Springs laboratory of AEA Technology have advised him of conflicts of interest.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Generating Industry (Government Support)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total financial support from the Government during 1993, direct and indirect, including research, given to (a) coal-fired power generation, (b) nuclear power, (c) gas-fired power generation, (d) oil-fired power generation, (e) wind power and (f) wave power.

Mr. Eggar: Financial support is given to the power generation industry through the fossil fuel levy. In 1992-93 the levy raised £1,348 million: of this some 98 per cent. went to nuclear power generators, and 2 per cent. to renewable generators. The proportion of levy receipts going to renewable generators is expected to increase during the 1990s, as more renewable generating plant is commissioned.

Information on the Government's expenditure on energy research and development is published in "Trade and Industry—The Government's Expenditure Plans 1994-95 to 1996-97", Cm 2504, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The estimated outturn for 1993-94 expenditure on R and D on renewables and novel sources of energy given at page 57 includes £7·31 million for wind power and £0·196 million for wave power.

Wind Energy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the location of those proposals for wind energy submitted for the new round of contracts under non-fossil fuel obligation 3 which are sited in Wales; and if he will give (a) the size, (b) the proposers and (c) other details of each such proposed new site in Wales.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the appropriate regional electricity companies and their agent, the Non-Fossil Purchasing Agency Ltd, which is co-ordinating applications from generators seeking contracts under the proposed third renewables order.

City (Short-termism)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department will take to deal with the short-termism of the City.

Mr. Sainsbury: Although the issue is unproven, there is a perception that short-termism exists. A lack of effective dialogue between companies and their shareholders may lead to short-term attitudes; by companies with regard to their investment decisions, and investors with regard to their shareholdings. My Department will continue to support initiatives which can lead to an improved level of understanding between the City and industry.

Regional Electricity Companies

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he has given Professor Littlechild concerning the potential subsidisation of the retail activities of regional electricity companies through their electricity supply functions.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply. It is a condition of regional electricity companies' licences that they may not cross-subsidise between their separate businesses.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints have been received by his Department from customers of regional electricity companies who believe that through the price of electricity they subsidise the retail activities of those companies.

Mr. Eggar: Over the last financial year, 1993-94, the Department of Trade and Industry has received no complaints from consumers on this matter.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information is collected by OFFER concerning the retail activities of regional electricity companies.

Mr. Eggar: The Director General of Electricity Supply has no power to intervene in the running of the regional electricity companies' retail businesses. A condition in their licences ensures that the RECs may not cross-subsidise between their separate businesses, and the Director General has a duty to collect information to ensure that this is the case.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount received from the flotation of the regional electricity companies; and what is their total current value.

Mr. Eggar: Proceeds from the sale of shares in the RECs was £5,040 million. In addition the companies were floated with a debt to the Government of £2,815 million.

Some of this debt has already been paid back to the Treasury and some has yet to be redeemed. Total proceeds of the sale, therefore, will amount to £7,855 million.

As with most other public limited companies the current values of the regional electricity companies are publicly quoted and vary on a day to day basis.

Figures are given to the nearest million pounds.

National Grid

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the esimated value of the National Grid following demerger from the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the current owners of the company to assess.

Coal Industry Bill

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, column 106, if he will place in the Library a copy of the National Rivers Authority's response to the consultation exercise on the Coal Authority explanatory note and draft model licensing and leasing documents.

Mr. Eggar: The response has been placed in the Library of the House.

Arms Exports (Indonesia)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make it his policy to halt immediately all arms exports to Indonesia if it is established that weapons or military vehicles which have been manufactured in Britain and exported to Indonesia are being used against the people of East Timor;

(2) what guarantees he has received from the Indonesian Government that British aircraft and weapons which have been exported to Indonesia will not be used against the people of East Timor.

Mr. Heseltine: Specific assurances have been given to the Government in respect of Hawk aircraft sales.

Because all applications for licensable goods are subject to strict controls and are scrutinised on a case by case basis, no further asssurances or guarantees have been deemed necessary.

If we believe that a prospective purchase of military goods is likely to be used for repressive purposes against a civilian population, the application is rejected.

If there is any evidence of British military equipment being used for repressive purposes against civilians I shall certainly consider it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cleaners

Mr. McMaster: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many cleaners are employed within the House and its associated offices; how many hours on average each cleaner works; and what is the hourly rate of pay for each grade of cleaner.

Mr. Beith: The House currently employs one full-time cleaner working 37 hours per week and 69 part-time cleaners working 17 hours per week in the Serjeant at Arms Department and one part-time cleaner in charge working 30 hours per week and four part-time cleaners working 28¼ hours per week in the Department of the Library. In negotiations recently concluded between management and the relevant trade union representatives, the number of part-time cleaners in the Serjeant's Department will, over time, be reduced to 62 by natural wastage.

The hourly rate of pay of the cleaners is £4·7044 per hour, rising to £4·78 after five years' service, and that of the cleaner in charge is £4·94/£5·37 depending on length of service, rising to £5·56 after three years' satisfactory service and £5·75 after a further three years satisfactory service.

Exhibitions (Upper Waiting Hall)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to education in developing countries to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 16 May to Friday 20 May.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Government Agencies

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what funds are being made available to the National Audit Office to investigate the work of Government agencies.

Sir Peter Hordern: The National Audit Office's budget of £36·5 million for 1994-95 includes provision both for financial audit of Government Departments, executive agencies, and a wide range of other public sector bodies, and for value for money investigations. As my hon. Friend will know, the forward investigation programme of the National Audit Office is a matter for the Comptroller and Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee.

Register of Members' Interests

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 513, for what reason the original HMSO estimate for the printing and publishing costs of the December 1992 Register of Members' Interests, HC 325 of 1992-93 was incorrect; by what percentage the revised figure differs from the previous estimate; what is the basis for those estimated costs and their revision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to Her Majesty's Stationery Office under its chief executive. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from Mr. P. Freeman to Sir Ralph Howell, dated 19 April 1994:

As you are aware, your Parliamentary Question to the Lord President of the Council, about the HMSO estimates for the printing and publishing costs of the December 1992 Register of Members' Interests has been referred to me for reply.

Regrettably, the cause for the error in the costs quoted in the Register was a calculation mistake which occurred within HMSO. In order to prevent any repetition, our verification procedure has been strengthened.

The revised cost estimate is 150 per cent. of the former incorrect figure. The production costs of preparation, pre-press, printing, finishing, packing and distribution provide the principle basis for HMSO cost estimates; publishing costs are normally calculated as a percentage addition.

Please let me know if I can help further.

TRANSPORT

M25

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects to be in a position to publish his proposals for additional capacity on the M25 between junctions 10 and 12;

(2) what criteria his Department is using in preparing the design of any proposals to provide additional capacity on the M25 between junctions 10 and 12; and what possibilities are being examined.

Mr. Key: These questions relate to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Mr. L. Haynes to Sir Cranley Onslow, dated 19 April 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the provision of additional capacity between junctions 10 and 12 of the M25.

Consultants have been asked to investigate options for increasing the capacity of this section of the motorway beyond dual four lanes to meet the traffic needs of this busy section of the M25 taking into account of environmental and economic constraints.

Following the recent Roads Review, this scheme is in the Priority 2 category. It is necessary, therefore, to reassess the programme. This process is not expected to take very long but until it has been completed I am afraid I am unable to say when any proposals could be published. I will write to you again then.

Highway Scheme Funding

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the highway schemes funded under section 272 of the Highways Act 1980, in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 showing (a) the total cost of each scheme, (b) the amount of the grant under section 272 and whether it was a grant or a loan, (c) to whom the grant or loan was authorised, (d) the reasons for using this procedure and (e) a description of the scheme.

Mr. Key: Details of the highway schemes that the Department agreed in principle would be funded under section 272 of the Highways Act 1980 in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 are as follows:

Year	Route/Scheme	Total cost (£ million)	Grant or Loan	To whom grant or loan authorised	Scheme description
1990 to 1991	A606 Little Wymondley bypass, Hertfordshire	11·3	100 per cent. grant	Hertfordshire county council	Dual two-lane all-purpose bypass
1990 to 1991	A418 Wing bypass, Buckinghamshire	18·3	100 per cent. grant	Buckinghamshire county council	Dual two-lane all-purpose bypass
1990 to 1991	A134 Fornham St. Martin, Suffolk	4·2	100 per cent. grant	Suffolk county council	Dual two-lane all-purpose bypass
1991 to 1992	A6(M) M56 (Manchester airport link) central section, Cheshire	14·8	100 per cent. grant	Cheshire county council	Part of dual carriageway A34 Wilmslow and Handford bypass
1991 to 1992	A16 Market Deeping/Deeping St. James bypass, Lincolnshire	5·8	100 per cent. grant	Lincolnshire county council	Dual two-lane all-purpose bypass
1992 to 1993	A12 Lowestoft eastern relief road, Suffolk	3·57	100 per cent. grant	Suffolk county council	Single carriageway relief road

Section 272 grants were awarded to these schemes because the Department intends to trunk the route and these improvements would offer significant benefits to the road network.

Rail Services, South-West

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received in 1994 from north Devon about the future of rail services in the south-west.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has received two representations from north Devon about the future of rail services in the south-west. Both concerned the future of the Exeter to Barnstaple line.

Transport Council

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the results of the Transport Council held in Luxembourg on 18 April.

Mr. MacGregor: The Transport Council met in Luxembourg on 18 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council had further discussions following the wise men's report on the airline industry. The Commission will present an action plan to the June Council. There is increasing support for the United Kingdom position on the need to implement in full the third aviation package and to have new Commission guidelines to deal with state aids.

Although there was some support for the United Kingdom view that the work on the opening of negotiations on air and road transport agreements with Switzerland should be resumed, further discussion was postponed until after the General Affairs Council in May has considered the wider implications of the recent Swiss referendum on lorry transit.

The Council asked for the draft directive on Community railway licensing to be further developed. Most member states, including the United Kingdom, favoured restricting its scope to operators of international services. More detailed discussions will take place before the proposal returns to the Council.

The Council remitted for further consideration by officials a proposed directive on transport of dangerous goods by road which seeks to extend to transport within a member state the provisions of a European agreement on such transport internationally.

The Council instructed the Commission to open negotiations on road transit with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania; and asked officials to consider further a mandate for wider negotiations on road transport with central and eastern European countries.

The Commission reported on progress on the continuing negotiations with east European countries on an agreement for the inland waterway sector. The Commission presented its proposal for a decision establishing guidelines for trans-European transport networks covering all modes of transport. I welcomed the proposal while highlighting the United Kingdom concern that trans-European network funding should not distort competition. I also mentioned that the United Kingdom would be likely to request changes to the United Kingdom network following the United Kingdom national roads programme review.

Other matters mentioned included Commission discussions with the United States of America on aviation and maritime issues and progress in the working groups on road safety. I undertook to send colleagues copies of the Donaldson report on the protection of the United Kingdom coastline from pollution from shipping when it is published. I propose to place it on the agenda for the next Council in June.

No votes were taken on any of the items.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sites of special scientific interest will have been saved by the recent Government announcements in relation to the roads programme.

Mr. Key: As a result of our recent review of the national road programme for England, eight sites of special scientific interest which could have been affected directly or indirectly by road schemes are no longer affected.

A5

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the second public inquiry into the Sheep lane junction on the A5 north of Dunstable will commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The development of this scheme is now an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive has written to my hon. Friend about the revised proposals for the Sheep lane junction.

Letter from Mr. L. Haynes to Sir David Madel, dated 19 April 1994:

Robert Key, Minister for Roads and Traffic, has asked me to reply to your question about development plans for the A5, Sheep Lane junction as responsibility for taking the scheme forward will now rest with the Highways Agency.

As I think you know, the Inspector at the first Public Inquiry rejected the Department's proposals for improvement of the junction by means of grade separation and recommended, instead, a roundabout solution. The Secretaries of State for the Environment and Transport accepted this and a roundabout scheme is now being developed by the Agency's Eastern Regional Office.

An option report is expected within the next 6 weeks. Following this, we should be in a position to publish draft Orders in the Autumn. The publication process will ensure that all those with an interest in the scheme will be able to register their views.

It is too soon to say whether a Public Inquiry will be necessary as this will depend on the weight and nature of objections received. If one is required then it is likely to be held around six months after publication of the draft Orders.

Progress thereafter will depend on satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and availability of funds.

I shall ensure that you are kept informed of key stage developments.

Air Traffic Services

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received the report from the working group of officials on the options for privatisation of the national air traffic services of the Civil Aviation Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received the working group report, which I am currently considering, and I hope to announce my response shortly.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many parliamentary questions to his Department in the past five years have not been answered because of disproportionate cost or because the information requested was not held centrally; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Norris: The number of questions to the Department that were not answered due to disproportionate cost or because the information was not held centrally over the last five years was 88.

The number of such questions that could now be answered due to increased computerisation and other changes to operational systems could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the United Kingdom Government are giving towards de-mining activity in Somaliland; and where de-mining activity is currently taking place in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not funding de-mining work currently. We provided almost £700,000 to support work in north-west Somalia from November 1991 to May 1993. We understand UNOSOM II is supporting 14 local mine clearance schemes and plans to expand them and to open a de-mining training school in Mogadishu.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which dam and large-scale power projects approved for ATP assistance in the last five years there has not been a full environmental impact assessment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All ODA projects, including ATP projects, are subject to environmental assessment according to the guidelines and procedures described in our Manual of Environmental Appraisal, first issued in 1989, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. If on initial screening the proposed development registers any significant environmental impacts then we would take further steps to ensure a more detailed environmental appraisal, or environmental impact assessment, is carried out.

The following two projects were not subject to more detailed environmental appraisal: gas turbines, Philippines; scattered diesels, Indonesia. Both projects were approved before the ODA guidelines on environmental appraisal came into being.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many refugees are estimated to be fleeing Rwanda; and what response is being made by the international community.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimated, as of 15 April 1994, that some 26,000 people had fled Rwanda, 12,000 of whom were Burundi refugees who had sought refuge in Rwanda; 9,000 Rwandese refugees are reported to have fled to Zaire. The situation, however, is in a state of flux. Britain has so far committed some £820,000 in humanitarian aid as our share of the international response. Details of responses by other donor countries are not yet available.

PRIME MINISTER

Council of Ministers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 29, concerning the powers of Her Majesty's Government within the Council of Ministers of the European Community, which articles listed refer to (a) obligatory duties or action as required by the treaties and (b) optional actions.

The Prime Minister: Whether the treaty requires the Council to act, or gives it a discretion whether or not to act, specific proposals for action made under the articles listed in my previous answer require the unanimous agreement of the Council.

Friendly Countries

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 908, regarding friendly countries, which countries and Governments are presently regarded as sharing the United Kingdom's objectives.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 31 March at column 908.

Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the current members of the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments.

The Prime Minister: The members of the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments are:

The right hon. the Lord Carlisle of Bucklow QC—Chairman
The Lord Bridges GCMG
Sir John Blelloch KCB
Sir Trevor Holdsworth
Sir Charles Huxtable KCB CBE
Sir Robin Ibbs KBE
The right hon. Peter Shore MP
The right hon. the Lord Thomson of Monifieth KT

I have recently appointed the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) and Sir John Blelloch, following the retirement at the end of their appointments of Lord Merlyn-Rees and Sir Patrick Nairne.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Reorganisation

14. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he has made to issue guidelines in relation to the liaison between local authorities and local water authorities after local government reorganisation.

Mr. Baldry: None. It is a matter for a local authority and a local water company what links are established between them, provided that they comply with statute. That applies whether local government structure is reorganised in their area or not.

18. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received on local government reforms.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend receives a number of representations from time to time relating to the reform of local government in England. Local government in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rio Earth Summit

19. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make further announcements about the process of taking forward the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the Rio earth summit.

Mr. Atkins: The Government published in January this year a comprehensive strategy on sustainable development and national plans on climate change, biodiversity, and forests. We are taking a full part in international action to follow up the earth summit, including preparations for the next meeting in May of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development.

21. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to review private rented housing.

Sir George Young: The private rented sector has already expanded considerably since deregulation in 1989. We have in hand a number of other initiatives to ensure that this revival continues.

Out-of-town Shopping Developments

22. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning his policy on out-of-town shopping developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We have received a number. The majority have been supportive of our policy of encouraging shopping development in or next to existing town centres and concentrations of people.

Listed Buildings

23. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to alter the planning regulations to give additional protection to listed buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Provisions in schedule 3 to the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 considerably strengthened the regime for enforcing listed building control. We will consider any additional provisions that my hon. Friend wishes to propose.

Right to Buy

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the law relating to the right to buy.

Sir George Young: I have no plans for a major review. I am, however, considering one or two minor clarifying amendments for introduction when a suitable opportunity arises.

Markets

25. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the licensing of markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Ministers receive representations on the licensing of markets from time to time.

Local Authority Capital Investment

26. Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for changing the methods of financing capital investment by local authorities.

Mr. Curry: The system established by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 fosters an appropriate pattern of investment while maintaining control of public expenditure.

Coal Mines (Water Pollution)

27. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the National Rivers Authority about the impact on watercourses of closed coal mines.

Mr. Atkins: My Department maintains regular contact with the National Rivers Authority about this and other issues.

Local Government (Royal Commission)

28. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will appoint a Royal Commission on local government.

Mr. Curry: No. My right hon. Friend sees no reason for the appointment of such a commission.

Sewage Sludge Dumping (North Sea)

29. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the need for a derogation from the European Union requirement to end North sea sewage sludge dumping.

Mr. Atkins: The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive does not provide for a derogation from the requirement to ban dumping of sewage sludge at sea by the end of 1998.

Council Tax

30. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the average council tax is for a band D property.

Mr. Baldry: The average headline council tax for a band D property for English authorities, based on information returned to my Department, is £580. This represents an increase of 2·2 per cent. on the 1993-94 average which was £568. Most households pay band C or less. The comparable band C figure for 1994-95 is £516.

38. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the differences in council tax levels between local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The average headline council tax (band C, two adults) ranges from £218 set by Westminster to £770 set by Liverpool. The average headline council tax (band C, two adults) for Conservative-controlled authorities is £429 while the average for Labour-controlled authorities is £560.

Local Authority Rents

31. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the average level of rent set by each local authority for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Sir George Young: The information so far available to my Department from local authorities' returns has been placed in the Library. It represents returns from 329 of the 366 housing authorities in England. My Department's estimate of the average council rent for 1994-95 is £35·70, an increase of £2·00 a week on 1993-94.

34. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the five London boroughs with the highest average council house rents, and the five lowest; and if he will give the political control of each of those councils.

Sir George Young: Local authorities report information on average rents on housing revenue account claim forms. The London boroughs with the five highest and five lowest average rents for 1994-95, based on the latest available information, are as follows:

	Average weekly rent 1994-95 (£)	Political control
Redbridge	63·75	Conservative
Harrow	62·97	Conservative
Westminster	61·43	Conservative
Kensington and Chelsea	60·28	Conservative
Kingston upon Thames	60·27	No overall control
Hounslow	39·97	Labour
Newham	39·88	Labour
Tower Hamlets	37·71	Liberal Democrat
Havering	36·91	No overall control
Barking	33·15	Labour

Rent levels reflect a number of factors, including the arrangements for setting guideline rents for HRA subsidy purposes. These arrangements are related to capital values, which generally lead to higher rent levels in areas where the average value of council dwellings are higher.

London (Quality of Life)

32. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he made of the responses to his London questionnaire on the changes in the quality of life for Londoners over the past 10 years.

Mr. Gummer: Our analysis of the responses did not reveal any comments on changes in the quality of life for Londoners over the past 10 years.

Local Government Powers

33. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to devolve power from central to local government.

Mr. Curry: The distribution of power between central and local government is guided by the principle of subsidiarity, which requires responsibility to be delegated to the level which is most consistent with competence, practicality and cost-effectiveness.

Energy Conservation Bill

35. Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received concerning the Energy Conservation Bill; what proportion are in favour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has received some 500 letters in support of the Energy Conservation Bill.

Planning Policy Guidance

36. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the implementation of planning policy guidance notes 6 and 13.

Mr. Gummer: These planning policy guidance notes play a key role in our sustainable development strategy by helping to maximise the potential of existing centres, and encouraging development in locations where there can be a choice of means of access—and which can help to reduce the need to travel. It is for local authorities to reflect this approach in their plans and planning decisions in the first instance. The principles will also apply to decisions on planning appeal and call-in.

Local Government Reorganisation (Cleveland)

37. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about local government reorganisation in Cleveland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We have received more than 300 representations about local government reorganisation in Cleveland since the Local Government Commission issued its final report last November. When we lay an implementation order for Cleveland we shall place a summary of these in the Library. Individual representations will be made available if requested unless the writers intended their views to be treated in confidence.

Charles House

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated total cost of the refurbishment of Charles house, London W14.

Sir George Young: This property, with an area of 33,000 sq. metres, is held on a lease expiring in June 2010 at an historically low rent. The refurbishment is being undertaken jointly by Property Holdings and Inland Revenue (the major occupier) at a total cost of £3·7 million, inclusive of fees and VAT. It will upgrade the accommodation to provide good value central London offices and at the same time enable the surrender of other premises showing an estimated annual saving of £4·3 million.

London Consultation Paper

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the responses to the consultation paper on "London: Making the Best Better", raised topics on which responses were not specifically invited; and if he will list each such topic, indicating the level of support from the public which it attracted.

Sir George Young: Question 1 of the questionnaire in "London: Making the Best Better" invited respondents to select aspects of London they appreciate from a list of 62 topics, with space to write in other aspects if they wished. All the other questions were open-ended and gave respondents free rein to raise the issues which concerned them about London. Distinctions between topics on which views were or were not specifically invited did not, therefore, arise and all the views expressed were taken into account in the analysis.

Housing Renovation Grants

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase or extend the availability of housing renovation grants.

Sir George Young: We will announce our conclusions on the future of private sector renewal programmes following last year's consultation exercise in due course.

Public Sector Housing Development

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land he expects to be used for public housing for (a) council and (b) housing association development during the current year; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: New house building by local authorities is now negligible. Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing.

Forecasts of the amount of land expected to be used for the provision of social housing, and the cost to public funds of the land, are not collected by the Housing Corporation or the Department. Housing association bids for funds from the Housing Corporation's approved development programme take into account the total cost of a scheme including any requirement to purchase land but do not identify the cost of the land separately.

Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent on consultants' fees by each urban development corporation since the corporations' inception.

Mr. Baldry: Urban development corporations contract our project management, legal, planning, architectural and engineering design and a range of other services to private sector consultants. In addition consultants are commissioned to produce reports, although this represents only a small proportion of the total expenditure. Expenditure from inception to 31 March 1994 on consultants' fees is as follows:

Urban development corporation	£ million
Birmingham heartlands	0·54
Black country	27·68
Bristol	6·40
Central Manchester	6·00
Leeds	4·93
London docklands	[1]52·70
Merseyside	24·40
Plymouth	0·58
Sheffield	11·14
Teesside	[2]26·92
Trafford Park	22·03
Tyne and Wear	25·49

[1] Figures from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1994—project consultancies only. Figures from inception to 31 March 1990 not available.
[2] Figures up to 31 March 1993.

Coalfield Areas Fund

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures on the distribution of the coalfield areas fund and on the share of the fund that is being made available in relation to the closure of Littleton colliery in south Staffordshire.

Mr. Baldry: The full £5 million available under the Coalfield Areas Fund was allocated last year, in response to bids from local authorities, as follows:

DOE Region and Authority	Bids approved (£)
Merseyside
St. Helens MBC (Parkside/Sutton Manor)	150,000
North West
Wigan MBC (Parkside)	120,000
North
Easington DC (Vane Tempest/Easington)	164,000
Durham Co.C (Vane Tempest/Easington)	86,000
West Midlands
Stoke-on-Trent Ci C (Trentham)	560,400
Staffordshire Co. C (Trentham)	266,000
East Midlands
Ashfield DC (Silverhill)	336,108
Rushcliffe BC (Cotgrave)	293,232
Nottinghamshire Co. C (Coalfield area/Cotgrave/ Bevercotes/Clipstone)	384,500
Bolsover DC (Bolsover/Shirebrook)	544,393
Newark and Sherwood DC (Clipstone)	72,756
Chesterfield BC (Bolsover)	214,000
Bassetlaw BC (Bevercotes)	193,800
Mansfield DC (Coalfield area/Clipstone/Shirebrook)	359,800
Derbyshire Co. C (Coalfield Area)	50,500
Yorkshire and Humberside
Doncaster MBC (Rossington/Markham Main)	648,150
Wakefield MDC (Sharlston)	288,000
Rotherham MBC (Maltby)	291,000
Total	5,022,639

Although communities affected by the closure of Littleton colliery have not been assisted by the Coalfield Areas Fund, they will benefit from other elements of the Government's £200 million package of assistance announced last year by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Urban Waste Water Directive (Torbay)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the kinds of tidal movements in Torbay; and if he will categorise the bay as less sensitive under the urban waste water directive.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 18 April at column 361.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority, together with an indication of political control, (a) the budget submitted for 1994-95, (b) the spending at standard spending assessment, (c) the percentage over standard spending assessment which the budget represents, (d) the percentage over the 1993-94 budget which the 1994-95 budget represents, (e) the provisional cap and (f) the approved cap.

Mr. Baldry: I am arranging for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he takes of the impact of fixed spending on capital financing costs in his policies on the capping of local authority expenditure.

Mr. Baldry: Provision for capital financing costs is included within authorities' standard spending assessments. In determining his principles for capping my right hon. Friend has regard to all relevant considerations. The cap proposed for any authority designated in accordance with those principles takes account of all the available information on its circumstances.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, columns 43-44, in what way his final proposals on capital financing standard spending assessments took into account responses to the consultation on his original proposals.

Mr. Baldry: The Secretary of State considered carefully all the representations which we received during the consultation period, including those relating to the capital financing element, and any other relevant information before taking his final decisions on the 1994-95 revenue support grant settlement.

European Structural Funds

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will present to the European Commission the Government's proposals for directing future European structural funds assistance towards regions in England seriously affected by industrial decline; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have arranged for the regional conversion plans for the nine regions in England designated by the Commission for assistance under structural funds objective 2 to be presented to the European Commission today. Funding under objective 2 contributes towards the development of regions (including employment areas and urban communities) seriously affected by industrial decline. The plans cover the period 1994-96, for which £1,195 million has been allocated to England.

The nine regions, with 1994-96 allocations, are North East England, £239 million; West Cumbria and Furness, £19 million; Yorkshire and Humberside, £243 million; East Midlands, £62 million; West Midlands, £287 million; Greater Manchester, Lancashire and Cheshire, £255 million; East London and Lee Valley, £57 million; Thanet, £11 million; and Plymouth, £22 million.

The plans have been lodged in time to ensure that the eligible date for expenditure on objective 2 programmes is 1 January 1994. Under the Structural Funds Regulations, the Commission is required to reach a decision on the plans within six months of receipt.

Rent Officers (Guidelines)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the guidelines issued to the rent officers to assist them in the setting of rent levels.

Sir George Young: When setting fair rents, rent officers follow the provisions of section 70 of the Rent Act 1977. When considering the reasonableness of market rents for housing benefit purposes, they follow the provisions of the Rent Officer (Additional Functions) Order 1990 (SI 428) as amended. The Secretary of State has no powers to issue guidelines about setting rents to rent officers, and has therefore not done so.

The Education Trust of the Institute of Rent Officers has established a working party to examine issues surrounding the determination of fair rents, and its report will be published during May.

Planning Applications

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the recommendations of the construction deregulation task force in relation to the contracting-out of the processing or planning applications and the introduction of a twin-tracking approach to technical assessment.

Mr. Baldry: The way in which planning authorities manage planning applications is best left to their discretion in the light of local circumstances. Planning authorities are already free to put the preliminary functions out to tender if they wish. But they must satisfy themselves that this would not compromise their statutory responsibilities, undermine the need to reach decisions on the basis of objective evidence or lead to conflicts of interest.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of public appointments made by his Department in 1993 were of (a) Asians and (b) black people; and if he will list their names.

Mr. Sproat: In 1993, 146 appointments were made to the bodies for which the Department of National Heritage is responsible. Of these, two appointments were of Asian people and two of black people, representing 1·37 per cent. in each case or a total of 2·7 per cent.

It would not be appropriate to identify individual appointees in the way requested.

All-seater Stadiums

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all recent statements made by Ministers in his Department in respect of alteration of the policy of all-seater stadiums for premier league and first division football clubs.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 April 1994]: There have been none. The all-seater policy remains unchanged.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the situation in Rwanda with particular reference to international action to end the violence.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The priority for the moment is to establish a cease-fire and create conditions in which the Arusha peace process and humanitarian relief efforts can be relaunched. The United Nations, countries of the region and the Organisation for African Unity are all playing a role in this.

European Treaties

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the differences in content, format, text, or other respect between the treaty on European Union published as Cm. 1934 in May 1992, and the treaty published as Cm. 2485 in March 1994; and when he expects to present to Parliament, in a similar fashion, the consolidated and amended treaties establishing the European Economic Community, Coal and Steel Community, Atomic Energy Community and European Union together with their protocols and declarations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Cm. 1934 is the text of the treaty on European union, as signed at Maastricht, and presented to Parliament in may 1992 as part of the European Communities series. Cm. 2485 contains the same text, but was published in the treaty series in March 1994, following the treaty's entry into force, in accordance with normal practice. It includes the date of the treaty's entry into force and the dates of ratification by the 12 member states. The consolidated text of the treaty establishing the EC, as amended by the treaty on European union, has already been published by the office for official publications of the European Communities. It is available in the Library of the House and through HMSO. An accompanying volume containing the consolidated texts of the ECSC and EURATOM treaties will be published shortly.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attitude the Russian Government are taking at the United Nations on the continuation of the sanctions against Serbia; and what assessment he has made of developments in this attitude.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been no recent discussions of sanctions in the United Nations Security Council. The Russian Government have not proposed revoking any of the Security Council resolutions which impose sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had and with whom on the present talks taking place on the confidence-building negotiations on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since the start of this year, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has discussed the United Nations Secretary-General's package of confidence-building measures for Cyprus with the Turkish Prime Minister, the Turkish, Greek and Cypriot Foreign Ministers, the United Nations Secretary-General and his Special Representative on Cyprus, the United States Secretary of State and with his European colleagues. Most recently I discussed Cyprus with the Cypriot Foreign Minister at the EC/Cyprus Association Council held in Luxembourg on 18 April.

We believe that the package offers substantial benefits to both communities. We welcome President Clerides' acceptance of the United Nations plan for its implementation and note that the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr. Denktash, continues to have objections. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister wrote to the Turkish Prime Minister on 6 April urging her to encourage Mr. Denktash to adopt a more constructive approach to the negotiations.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Prime Minister of Pakistan on the issue of Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary most recently discussed the issue of Kashmir with the Prime Minister of Pakistan at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Limassol on 22 October 1993. We have continued to be in regular communication with the Government of Pakistan on the issue.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Goodlad: To the best of our knowledge, only one private security company has been employed by the FCO in this country in the past 10 years. Southern Security Guards Ltd. were employed between October 1992 and April 1993 to guard Wiston house conference centre. Two to four guards are employed at a cost of £2,998·52.

No central record is kept of security companies employed by our overseas posts.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international sanctions are applied to Burma; and what further action is being considered by Her Majesty's Government and international bodies.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Union suspended all non-humanitarian aid to Burma in 1988. In 1991, the EU imposed an arms embargo on Burma, and in 1992 it severed remaining defence links. We and our European partners continue to encourage like-minded countries to do the same.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action was taken on Burma by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights at its recent meeting in Geneva; and what was the response of the Burmese Government.

Mr. Goodlad: The 1994 session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva adopted a consensus resolution strongly criticising the human rights situation in Burma. The Burmese argued that the terms of the resolution were an unacceptable intrusion into Burma's domestic juridiction.

Human Rights

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to increase the resources available to the United Nations centre for human rights in Geneva.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Last year the United Nations Secretary General proposed a large increase in funding for the United Nations human rights programme in 1994-1995. The United Nations General Assembly in 1993 recognised the need for further additional resources to fund the new High Commissioner for Human Rights. We welcomed both steps, and hope that they will be confirmed in the next few weeks. We will continue to support the efforts of the Secretary General to increase the resources available to the centre, if necessary through redeployment from areas of lesser priority.

Immigration Applications

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on an application made by Mr. Gulnamaz, ref: CON/3798, to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad; when the result of a DNA test required to consider the application by Mr. Gulnamaz was received by the post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mr. Gulnamaz Din's most recent application for a British passport was refused and his fee refunded on 30 March 1993.

The British High Commission in Islamabad understands that Mr. Gulnamaz has opted for DNA testing and has an appointment to give a blood sample on 15 May. In the meantime, he will need to reapply for a passport. This can then be considered in the light of the test results. As explained in my letter of 7 May 1993, however, DNA testing cannot establish that Mr. Gulnamaz's claimed parents were married at the time of his birth. Mr. Gulnamaz's elegibility for British nationality is dependent on his legitimate descent from his claimed father.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when decisions are to be taken by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad on the applications, ref: IMM/4343, of Sabreen Jan, date of birth 13 November 1990, Amina Bibi, date of birth 1 April 1988 and Muchtaq Ahmed date of birth 15 December 1986 to enter the United Kingdom; when these children took DNA tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: DNA test results in respect of Sabreen Jan, Amina Bibi and Mushtaq Ali were received by the British High Commission in Islamabad on 16 July 1993. It was then necessary for the High Commission to ask the children's father, Mohammed Ishaq, for information about his domicile in order to ascertain whether the children had a claim to British nationality by descent from him.

He completed the domicile questionnaire on 17 January 1994 and this was then sent to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for consideration. Althugh clarification of some points is needed, sufficient information is available for the High Commission to issue restricted-validity passports to the children. This will enable them to travel while the remaining details are resolved.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application made by Mukhtaj Bibi, who was born on 1 November 1972, ref: IMM 67849, to enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to let the hon. Member have a substantive reply in due course.

Intelligence Services

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the criteria will be for authorising publications by former members of the security and intelligence agencies, following the passage of the Intelligence Services Bill [Lords].

Mr. Hurd: Former employees of the security and intelligence agencies who wish to publish books or articles, give interviews to the media or provide information for other writers or historians are bound by a duty of confidence to the Crown and are subject to section 1(1) of the Official Secrets Act 1989. These obligations are made clear to people when they take up employment with the agencies and when they leave. No former member of the agencies need be in any doubt about his obligations. The same arrangements would apply to a person notified under section 1(1)(b) of the OSA with respect to the period while the notification is or was in force. On 21 December 1988 at column 538 my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), then Minister of State, Home Office, set out the procedures for authorising disclosures under section 1(1) of what is now the Official Secrets Act 1989. He made it clear that such authorisation would be given only in exceptional circumstances.

The need to protect sensitive information is fully recognised in the Intelligence Services Bill, as it is in the Security Service Act 1989. The Bill defines strictly the circumstances under which information may properly be disclosed by the intelligence services including disclosure of records in accordance with the Public Records Act 1958 and 1967, which of course applies only to matters over 30 years old.

Authorisation for publication or other disclosure will accordingly be especially rare and exceptionai with regard to events which happened less than 30 years ago. In any case where a former member of the security and intelligence agencies or a person notified under section 1 (1) (b) as described above wishes to publish or otherwise disclose material relating to his official duties, whether older than 30 years or not, he will need to apply to his former employer for authority to disclose. But there may, in the case of older material, be more likelihood that there will be no objection to disclosure. Any applications made in good faith would be looked at on their individual merits, and would still be judged on whether disclosure of any particular piece of information would jeopardise national security, whether directly or indirectly. If not, the service would be able so to inform the prospective author and give him authority to make the disclosure, so that it would not be contrary to section 1 (1) of the Official Secrets Act 1989 nor in breach of his civil duty of confidence. Authorisation would imply only that there were no concerns about national security. It would not imply that the Crown had endorsed the publication or confirmed the accuracy of its contents. The Crown would reserve the right not to give authorisation in cases where an officer had committed breaches of the criminal law or his civil obligations.

HEALTH

NHS Reforms (London)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the reasons for the publication of the leaflet on "NHS Changes in London"; what was the total cost of publication; and from whom legal advice was sought before publishing it;

(2) what means of assessment she used when drafting the leaflet "NHS Changes in London" of the questions which needed to be covered.

Dr. Mawhinney: The leaflet was produced to address and answer key questions about health services in London. It was cleared by officials in the normal way. The estimated cost of producing and distributing the leaflet is £150,000.

Amyl Nitrites

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to declare the sale of those sex-enhancing drugs which alter physiological functioning, with particular reference to nitrites, illegal under the Medicines Acts; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what licensing, testing and quality controls and other regulations are applied to the manufacture and sale of the sex-enhancing drugs Rock Hard, Kix, Rush, Ram, Thunderbolt and other nitrites which are most commonly used to facilitate homosexual practices; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency regulates human medicines in the United Kingdom in accordance with the Medicines Acts of 1968 and 1971 and Pharmaceutical Directives of the European Community. No alkyl nitrite is licensed as a medicinal product, and in consequence no product containing nitrite is currently subject to the statutory controls on the manufacture and supply of medicinal products.

Alkyl nitrites are not being promoted for sale explicitly as sexual stimulants. If they were, they would have to be licensed under the Medicines Act 1968, which defines interference with a physiological function as a medicinal purpose. The MCA will investigate all reports of unlicensed medicines, their advertising, labelling and sales, and take the appropriate enforcement action.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those trusts, by region, that have failed to (a) achieve a capital return of 6 per cent. or more, (b) break even and (c) operate within external financing limits in each year since their inception.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 will be placed in the Library. Information for 1993-94 will not be available until the annual accounts of trusts are audited.

The majority of trusts listed had technical issues which affected their ability to meet their financial duties. This does not imply any failure in financial control. In a number of cases the difference between actual financial performance and statutory target is deemed to be immaterial.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the average working hours of junior doctors this year (a) nationally and (b) in Coventry and the west midlands; and what the figures were for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the number of hours worked by junior doctors is not available centrally. Figures for the average contracted hours of junior doctors and dentists are shown in the table. The figures for September 1993 are not yet available.

Mean contracted hours of junior doctors in England, West Midlands and Coventry as at 30 September 1991 and 1992

	1991	1992
England	80	75
West Midlands	84	76
Coventry	82	76

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for reducing the working hours of junior doctors; and what discussions she has had with the British Medical Association regarding this matter.

Dr. Mawhinney: Our targets for reducing junior doctors' hours are set out in the new deal guidance, copies of which are available in the Library. Regional office task forces support and monitor implementation of the new deal. They report regularly to a ministerial group. The medical profession is fully represented on that group.

The new deal is a joint initiative between the United Kingdom health departments, the medical profession and the national health service and was based on an agreement with representatives of consultants, junior doctors, the medical royal colleges and national health service management.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from organisations or members of the public regarding the working hours of junior doctors; and if she will name the organisations.

Dr. Mawhinney: There has been a great deal of interest, from organisations and members of the public, in the progress made to reduce junior doctors' hours since the launch of the new deal in 1991.

Listing all those making representations would involve disproportionate cost.

Health Information

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of running the NHS changes in London health information service telephone line.

Dr. Mawhinney: The line is operated by the already established health information services in the London area; no additional costs have been incurred.

Nurses (Smoking)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to help nurses who smoke to give up smoking.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for all national health service authorities and provider units to pursue in accordance with the guidance, HSG(92)41, published in October 1992 on the introduction of smoking policies in the NHS. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Immunisation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the relative cost of delivering immunisation by prefilled syringe and the traditional method of vial, syringe and needle.

Mr. Sackville: Requests for the provision of prefilled syringe presentations are being carefully monitored. At present, demand is only a small proportion of the totality in respect of vaccine supplied for the childhood immunisation programme. New contracts for most centrally purchased vaccines are due from 1 October 1994. The relative costs will be considered at the adjudication stage of the contracting procedures.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to which health authorities she has written requesting that they restart the Bacille-Calmette-Guérin immunisation programme.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not written to any health authorities requesting that they restart the schools Bacille-Calmette-Guérin immunisation programme. The importance of the programme has been drawn to the attention of all regional health authorities through the regional review process; regions have been asked to consider carefully whether their arrangements to protect against tuberculosis are adequate. We are aware that some districts which have suspended their programme are reconsidering their policies.

Disciplinary Procedures

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 724, when she plans to implement recommendation 14 of HC(90)9 on proceedings against doctors, to introduce arrangements for monitoring the new procedure; when the HC(90)9 procedure is to be reviewed and by whom; how public expenditure arising from the use of this procedure is monitored; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Employing authorities were asked to monitor the procedures in HC(90)9 in order to inform a review which commenced in April 1993. This review was carried out by a joint working party chaired by Dr. Graham Winyard, medical director of the national health service executive. The joint working party contained representatives of the medical profession, the Health Departments and national health service management. Information on the expenditure arising from the use of these procedures is not available centrally.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 724, what plans she has to set up systems for collecting information on disciplinary action on hospital doctors; and whether trusts have specific budgets to meet the legal costs when taking disciplinary proceedings against a doctor under the procedure HC(90)9.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to collect such information. Legal costs would be an expenditure item which trusts would recover in prices through the contracting system.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 724, how many doctors have been dismissed since 1990 on grounds of personal misconduct; and what was the total number of doctors dismissed from national health service posts since 1990;

(2) what changes there have been in the number of doctors (a) suspended, (b) subject to disciplinary hearing and (c) dismissed since 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: Decisions on disciplinary action for hospital doctors and dentists rests with the employing authority or trust. This includes whether to suspend or dismiss a practitioner.

Pacemaker Leads

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Meditronic was first licensed to sell pacemaker leads in the United Kingdom; and which leads were licensed, by date.

Mr. Sackville: There is no requirement for the licensing of medical devices intended for sale within the United Kingdom, including pacemaker leads.

The Department of Health has operated a voluntary registration scheme for manufacturers of medical devices since 1981; Meditronic was first registered on 10 October 1983.

Waiting Times

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients have been waiting (a) six months or more and (b) one year or more for in-patient operations in each London health authority;

(2) what is the latest number of patients awaiting (a) in-patient and (b) day-case treatment in each London district health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment by district health authority and trust is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England". This is published twice yearly and copies are available in the Library.

Medico-legal Services (Charges)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average hourly fee charged by doctors acting in (a) a professional and (b) an expert capacity for preparing medico-legal reports to be presented in court;

(2) what is the average half-day fee paid to (a) professional medical witnesses and (b) expert medical witnesses for attendance at court.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fees are set by individual negotiation on each case and data are not available centrally.

Limb Defects

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys national analysis of the geographical pattern of limb reduction defects will be published.

Mr. Sackville: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has completed its analysis of the geographical pattern of limb reduction defects in England and Wales. It has concluded that there is no difference in prevalence in these malformations between coastal and non-coastal areas. The full text of the analysis will be placed in the Library and is being published in this week's edition of The Lancet.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year from 1990 the expenditure on mobile phones by (a) region, (b) district health authority and (c) trust in England.

Mr. Sackville: Health authority and national health service trust financial returns do not identify expenditure for mobile telephones separately from other telecommunications expenditure.

Corporate Image Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each new regional health authority, the expenditure on a new corporate image in terms of (a) stationery, (b) publications, (c) signage, (d) livery, (e) logo design and (f) in total.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 31 March at columns 1049-50. The new corporate identity which has been developed for the National Health Service Executive is a single common design for use by the headquarters and regional offices of the NHS Executive, and also by regional health authorities.

Performance Tables

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the allocated budget for the new NHS performance tables; and if she will indicate the value of the contract awarded to Phoenix Interface Technology Ltd.

Dr. Mawhinney: The budget for the first set of national health service performance tables is £300,000. This includes the cost of the contract for the initial data collection exercise which was awarded to Siemens-Nixdorf Information Systems Limited who subcontracted to Phoenix Interface Technology Ltd. The value of the contract was £16,423 plus value added tax. The initial non-recurring set-up costs have yet to be finalised.

Leaflets, London

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which constituencies the leaflet, "NHS Changes in London —answers to the Questions You've Been Asking", has been delivered; and what criteria were used in deciding on these constituencies.

Dr. Mawhinney: The leaflet distribution was targeted at households within the area bounded by the M25. Constituency boundaries were not taken into account in determining distribution.

"Bringing Up Children"

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's proposed booklet, "Bringing Up Children"; what distribution is intended; at what expense; and for what purposes.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have been asked to reply.

The updated parents charter will be distributed to every household in England at an estimated cost of £630,000. It will not be a guide for parents on bringing up children; rather it will explain how parents' rights have been strengthened, and choice extended, since the publication of the first parents charter in 1991.

DEFENCE

Belize

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now reconsider the decision to withdraw the British garrison from Belize.

Mr. Hanley: We see no reason to change our plans for the evolution of the British military presence in Belize as announced on 13 May 1993. From 1 October 1994 we will continue to have a presence in Belize, in the form of the British Army training support unit Belize which will provide jungle training to British military units.

Germ Warfare

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from his (a) Russian and (b) American counterparts regarding the current status of the research and development capability of Russia's germ warfare programme.

Mr. Hanley: The terms of the 1992 Russia—United States—United Kingdom trilateral agreement designed to address concerns about Russian non-compliance with the 1972 biological and toxin weapons convention, only allows for information to be exchanged on a confidential basis. It is not therefore possible to reveal details of information gained through this process.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the incident that occurred at Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston on 24 March 1994, and place in the Library a copy of the unclassified version of the local board of inquiry report into that incident when it is completed.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 19 April at column 501. Arrangements will be made for a copy of an unclassified version of the board of inquiry report to be placed in the Library in due course.

RAF Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 14 January to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), Official Report, column 350, and of 21 February to the hon. Member for East Lothian, Official Report, column 66, how much has been spent on refurbishment at RAF Carlisle over the past (a) five and (b) 10 years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the spending on each element of the programmes of refurbishment and upgrading carried out in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the advisory committee on conscientious objectors.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

John W. Rogers QC (Chairman)
Hon. Mr. Justice Latham (Vice Chairman)
A. D. Collins QC (Deputy Vice Chairman)
M. M. Brooke
Professor J. Cheetham
B. J. S. Edmond
Mrs. J. A. Kirkpatrick
R. Hazell
D. J. Burt
Mrs. R. E. Nugee JP

"Statement on the Defence Estimates"

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he will be publishing the 1994 "Statement on the Defence Estimates"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what publicity work will be carried out relating to the publication of the 1994 "Statement on the Defence Estimates"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 18 April 1994]: the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994" will be published and laid in the House on Tuesday 26 April. This will be followed by a press briefing and publication of a press notice.

EDUCATION

Pupil-teacher Ratio

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current pupil-teacher ratio in (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special schools in each London borough.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Student Grants

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the principal conclusions of the Gulbenkian Foundation survey into discretionary grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) on 13 April at column 196.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place a copy of the report of the Gulbenkian Foundation on discretionary grants in the Library.

Mr. Boswell: A copy of the report is already available in the Library, placed there on publication by the Calouste Gulbenkian and Sir John Cass's Foundations.

Supply Teachers

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for how many days supply teachers have been employed since April 1993 in (a) England and (b) each London borough.

Mr. Robin Squire: The detail requested is not available. An annual survey of teachers employed in the maintained sector gives a snapshot view of occasional supply teachers employed for the whole day in schools on the survey date. There were 12,446 such teachers in service on 21 January 1993 in England. Reliable figures at local education authority level are not available.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many supply teachers are registered with each local education authority in London.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not centrally collected.

Teachers (Illness)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what analysis he has done of the numbers of teaching days lost due to stress-related illnesses since April 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not collect information on teacher absence due to illness.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 522, what requests he received to meet Labour Members representing London constituencies to discuss problems facing their constituents; what responses he gave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: I have received the following requests[1]:

Member of Parliament	Date	Response
Nick Raynsford (Greenwich)	1 August 1993	Request accepted
Michael Neubert (Romford)	5 October 1993	Request accepted
Mike Gapes (Ilford South)	24 February 1994	Request declined

Notes:
[1] The details cover all requests for meetings received by the Secretary of State or one of the Ministers in the Department since 1 March 1993, the time period for which the hon. Member asked his earlier question concerning meetings with hon. Members representing constituencies in London.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 522, which hon. Members representing London constituencies he or Ministers in his Department have met since April 1992.

Mr. Patten: The details requested are as follows:

Secretary of State
Hugh Dykes MP (Harrow, East)—4 March 1993
The right hon. Nicholas Scott MP (Chelsea)—20 December 1993

Minister of State—The Baroness Blatch
John Marshall (Hendon, South)—13 January 1994
Richard Tracey (Surbiton)—28 February 1994

Mr. Boswell
None

Mr. Forth
Hartley Booth (Finchley)—22 July 1993
Nigel Spearing (Newham)—5 October 1992
Matthew Carrington (Fulham)—7 January 1993
Tim Eggar (Enfield)—10 February 1993
Michael Neubert (Romford)—26 October 1993
John Bowis (Battersea)—17 January 1994
Nick Raynsford (Greenwich)—12 April 1994

Mr. Squire
Richard Tracey (Surbiton)—12 October 1993
Michael Shersby (Uxbridge)—2 December 1993
Piers Merchant (Beckenham)—15 March 1994

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 522, how many Labour Members nationally he, or Ministers in his Department, have met in the last year; and if he will list them.

Mr. Patten: The details requested are as follows:

Secretary of State
None.

Minister of State—The Baroness Blatch
None.

Mr. Boswell
None.

Mr. Forth
Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr)—13 July 1994
Wyn Griffiths (Bridgend)—27 July 1993
Nick Raynsford (Greenwich)—12 April 1994
Greg Pope (Hyndburn) and Peter Pike (Burnley)—23 February 1994 (this was part of an all-Party delegation from Lancashire county council)

Mr. Squire
None.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many requests he has received from the hon. Member for Ilford, South for a meeting to discuss the educational problems and overcrowding in the London borough of Redbridge; on what dates he received the letters; and what was the response.

Mr. Patten: I have received one request from the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) for a meeting. This was received on 24 February 1994. This request was declined by the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) as Minister responsible for school organisation issues on my behalf. He advised the hon. Member that I have no powers of intervention in the matter.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment, Lewisham

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Lewisham, East have been unemployed for more than two years; what percentage of the unemployed in Lewisham, East this represents; how many are women; and how many are aged under 25 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table:

Claimant unemployment in Lewisham, East—January 1994

	Number
Claimants unemployed for over 2 years:	[1]1,319
Of which:
Women	215
Under 25's	190

[1] 25 per cent. of all unemployed in the area.

Note: Claimant unemployment statistics by age and duration are available on the unadjusted basis from the NOMIS database in the Library for the months of January, April, July and October.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what current United Kingdom legislation makes provision against discrimination on grounds of age in employment matters; how many United Kingdom employees have (a) won and (b) lost an appeal against unfair dismissal on the grounds of age discrimination; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no United Kingdom legislation which makes provision against discrimination on grounds of age in employment. The Government firmly believe that the way forward is through education and persuasion.

The consideration of whether a dismissal is unfair may include consideration of how age has been taken into account in the decision to dismiss, but this depends on the particular circumstances of the case. Industrial tribunals' central office does not keep records of the factors involved in such cases and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ionising Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evaluation he has made of the proposals made by Mr. Paul Lannoye MEP in his report A3-0147/94 on the amended proposal for a council directive laying down the basic safety standards for the protection of the health of workers and general public against the dangers arising from ionising radiation (COM(93)0349-C3-0282/93, of 17 March.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None; the proposals are being made to a Committee of the European Parliament.

JHP Training

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much public money has been paid to JHP Training by training and enterprise councils in each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not collected centrally. Contracts between training and enterprise councils and their training providers are matters for local negotiation and the details are commercially confidential.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) deaths, (b) major injuries and (c) minor injuries were reported to (i) the mines inspectorate, (ii) the railways inspectorate, (iii) the offshore safety inspectorate and (iv) the explosives inspectorate in each year since 1983.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is provided in the following table. There was no overall requirement to notify "minor" injuries—that is, those causing incapacity for work for more than three days during the years 1983 to 1985.

Training Programmes

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the figures for operating surplus accumulated from Government-funded training programmes for (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93.

Miss Widdecombe: Government-funded training programmes in England and Wales are delivered through training and enterprise councils.

TECs may generate operating surpluses by sub-contracting training programmes at lower unit prices than those negotiated with the Department, by keeping administrative costs below the management fee paid by the Department, by earning other income or by carrying out other business in accordance with their articles and memorandum of association.

The surplus generated from all these activities is shown in the TECs published accounts. The operating surplus accumulated specifically from Government-funded training programmes is not published separately.

A full set of accounts for each TEC, for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total budget for training for work, including the participants' allowance, for England and Wales in 1994-95.

Miss Widdecombe: The total budget for the training for work scheme for England and Wales in 1994-95, including training allowances, is £749 million.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the 1993-94 budgets for training for work and youth training was unspent.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not yet available. It will be published in the Department's appropriation accounts later in the year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total accumulated surplus held in TEC reserves that is now available to TECs.

Miss Widdecombe: The total accumulated surplus held in training and enterprise council reserves is shown in the TECs' published accounts. A full set of accounts for each TEC, for the year ending 31 March 1993, has been placed in the Library.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Workplace Deaths

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, columns 813-14, what was the result of each prosecution listed in the table supplied.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the following table:

OUTCOME OF THE PROSECUTIONS WHICH FOLLOWED FATALITIES IN 1992-93

Wales and South West Region
Six fatalities led to prosecution action:

Working Hours

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research he has commissioned about any link between long working hours and the health and safety of employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Professor J. M. Harrington of the University of Birmingham institute of occupational health was commissioned last year to identify and evaluate pertinent medical and scientific literature relating to the effect, if any, of hours of work on employees' health.

The Health and Safety Executive has previously commissioned the studies "Shift Work and Health—a Critical Review of the Literature", Harrington, 1978 and "Shiftwork, Health and Safety—an overview of the scientific literature 1978-1990", Waterhouse, Folkard and Minors, 1992.

Unemployment (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of unemployment for the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest available date; and where Liverpool, Riverside stands in the list of constituencies ranked by level of unemployment.

Miss Widdecombe: In February 1994, unadjusted claimant unemployment in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency was 7,019. Only unemployment rates provide meaningful rankings for areas, such as parliamentary constituencies, with different sized work forces. Official unemployment rates are not available below travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to reduce unemployment in (a) Merseyside and (b) Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The overall policy of the Department is to promote a free and flexible labour market that is designed to help encourage employment in Merseyside and Liverpool, as in all areas.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council held on 19 April.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I attended the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council held on 19 April in Luxembourg and was accompanied by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security.

The Council considered a number of Commission proposals, but no final decisions were reached and no votes were taken.

The directive on the protection of young workers was discussed in the light of the Commission's proposed amendments to the common position reached at the Social Affairs Council on 23 November. No decision was reached. We were successful in our efforts at the meeting to resist European Parliament attempts to remove the United Kingdom's opt-out. Most member states indicated that they could accept a presidency proposal which included the whole of the United Kingdom opt-out and its renewability. There will be a further discussion of the directive at the Social Affairs Council in June.

The Commission's draft programme on social exclusion was also discussed and will be considered further at the June Council.

The Council reached agreement in principle on the composition of the administrative board of the proposed health and safety agency in Bilbao. A number of other outstanding issues were returned to Council working groups for further discussion.

The Council agreed that the Commission should consider how best to take forward the draft directives on parental leave, non-standard work and the reversal of the burden of proof in equal pay and equal treatment cases. The Commissioner acknowledged that the United Kingdom maintained its opposition to the proposed directives.

The Council heard progress reports from Commissioner Flynn on follow-up to the Delors White Paper and on responses to his own Green Paper on European social policy. There will be a substantive discussion on the Green Paper at the June Social Affairs Council meeting. The United Kingdom Government's response to the Green Paper was submitted promptly, but responses from some other member states had yet to arrive.

The Council discussed the operation of the social protocol and the agreement of the Eleven in the light of a communication from the Commission. Commissioner Flynn provided a report on progress with the proposal on European Works Councils. Discussions between the social partners had broken down and the Commission had now agreed the text of a new proposal to be discussed under the agreement of the Eleven. The directive would not apply in the United Kingdom. Commissioner Flynn also made a preliminary presentation on a Commission communication on asylum and immigration policy.

Finally, the Council agreed that the Commission should look into Belgian concerns about the operation of EC social security regulations for posted workers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assurances were given when she met the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisation in discussing future accession to the Barents sea;

(2) what rights of access for fishing are being purchased from Russia for (a) Spain and (b) the United Kingdom as a result of Norwegian access negotiations; and how these will be paid for;

(3) what priority will be given to the United Kingdom against other countries when future opportunities arrive for the United Kingdom distant water fleet in the Barents sea.

Mr. Jack: The agreement reached between the EU and Norway on the terms for Norwegian accession to the Union provided for fishing opportunities for 8,000 tonnes of arctic cod or equivalent to be secured for the cohesion countries —Spain, Portugal, Ireland and Greece—from third countries. As is normal in such arrangements, the cost will be a charge to the Community budget.

I have made clear to the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations that I will press for a United Kingdom quota share under any EU-Russia fisheries agreement which may be negotiated.

Mauritius Initiative

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 13 April, what financial contribution is to be provided for the initiative being undertaken for Mauritius by the royal botanic gardens, Kew.

Mr. Jack: Two ex-horticulture diploma students from Kew are currently working on a voluntary basis with the Mauritian Wild Life Appeal Fund, supported partly by donations from several Kew-based scholarship funds. Work at Kew on propagation of a number of Mauritian endangered species for eventual reintroduction to their original habitats is supported from Ministry grant-in-aid. The Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew, has yet to decide on future collaborative activity and levels of funding.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 23 March, Official Report, columns 318-19, if she will list the firms of consultants employed by her Department and the number of contracts they have undertaken since 1990-91.

Mr. Jack: Details of consultants employed by the Department—excluding agencies—since 1990-91 are set out in the table. These exclude information relating to contracts with information technology consultants, details of which were provided to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 18 April at columns 407-11.

Animal Slaughter

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence she has of infringements of directive 74/577 in other EC states.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend's attention has been drawn to several alleged infringements of Directive 74/577 purporting to have taken place in other member states during 1993.

Sheep Slaughtering, Spain

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has made to the Spanish Agriculture Minister regarding the slaughter of sheep in Spanish abattoirs; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend raised the subject with the Spanish Agriculture Minister in the margins of the November 1993 Agriculture Council in the light of allegations about sheep being slaughtered in some Spanish abattoirs in a way contrary to EC welfare legislation. Written assurances were received that these allegations were being investigated, and that action would be taken where appropriate. My right hon. Friend wrote on 24 January seeking confirmation of the results of the investigations and measures adopted. A reply is awaited.

Animal Exports

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) pigs, (b) sheep, (c) calves and (d) adult cattle were exported from the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames: The information requested for 1992 can be found in the Central Statistical Office publication, "Business Monitor, Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom MA 20 1992", and for each earlier year the data can be found in the previous editions of this publication and its forerunners. The House of Commons Library holds a copy of these publications back to 1965.

Livestock Haulage Vehicles

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many livestock haulage vehicles were checked on each motorway; how many were found to comply with regulations; and how many were found to be defective in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Provisions relating to the welfare of animals during transport are enforced by local authorities. Statistics from local authority sources indicate that, during the year 1992-93, 190,100 vehicle inspections were made at roadside checks, in markets and at other places; 182 prosecutions were taken under the legislation relating to welfare of animals in transport, and 61 formal cautions issued. In a further 2,725 cases advice or warnings were given. Additional information is not recorded centrally.

Departmental Campaigns

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 743, by what date she intends to place in the Library summaries of market research relating to her Department's campaigns.

Mr. Jack: Copies of market research relating to Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food campaigns have been placed in the Library.

Farm Statistics

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which English counties are grouped together for the purposes of compiling the annual farm business survey; and which universities and colleges are commissioned to carry out the survey for each group.

Mrs. Shephard: Appendix 4 of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" provides a list of the centres engaged in the collection of data for the Farm Business Survey. The table shows the counties and districts allocated to each centre.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many producers were entitled to hill livestock compensatory allowances for each farm business survey county group in each year since 1992 and in 1994.

Mrs. Shephard: The table provides information on the number of claims paid in 1992 and 1993 corresponding to the areas covered by each of the FBS provinces. Information for 1994 is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average net farm income of farmers and their spouses for (a) each English county and (b) each farm business survey county group, of all (i) SDA, (ii) DA, and (iii) less-favoured area farms and for (1) SDA, (2) DA farms and (3) less-favoured area farms larger than eight ESUs.

Mrs. Shephard: Information on farm incomes is available from the Farm Business Survey which collects data from a sample of farms classified as full time—that is with eight ESU or more. The sample for the Farm Business Survey is intended to provide estimates for three regions of England. The results for individual FBS provinces are liable to larger margins of error than for these regions and results are not available for individual counties. For those provinces for which there is a large enough sample for some average results to be provided, the following table provides weighted estimates of the net farm income for farms classified as cattle and sheep, less-favoured area, for the 1992-93 accounting year. Comparable information for farms with less than eight ESU is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total value of less-favoured area farming to the economy of (a) each English county and (b) each farm business survey county group.

Mrs. Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total value in actual and real terms of all livestock subsidies to (a) all less-favoured area farms and (b) less-favoured area farms larger than eight ESUs, for (i) each English county and (ii) each farm business survey county group in (1) 1992, (2) 1993 and (3) 1994.

Mrs. Shephard: I regret that detailed information on the subsidies paid to less-favoured area farms is not separately available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total value in actual terms and real terms of HLCA payments to (a) all less-favoured area farms and (b) less-favoured area farm area farms larger than eight ESUs for (i) each English county and (ii) each farm business survey county group in (1) 1992, (2) 1993 and (3) 1994.

Mrs. Shephard: The table shows the total HLCA payments on all farms in each county and Farm Business Survey province for 1992 and 1994. Information on payments is not separately available for farms larger than eight ESU and information for 1994 is not yet complete.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial value in actual and real terms has been removed from the value of HLCA payments to (a) all less-favoured area farms and (b) less-favoured area farms larger than eight ESUs for (i) each English county and (ii) each farm business survey county group following the cuts in HLCAs in (1) 1993 and (2) 1994.

Mrs. Shephard: The total change in the value of HLCA payments to farmers in the less favoured areas of England between 1992 and 1993 was –£4,960,065 divided among the counties and FBS provinces with LFA land as shown in the table. Information in respect of businesses larger than eight ESU is not available and information for 1994 is not yet complete.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people including farmers, spouses and workers are employed full time in (a) all farming and (b) less-favoured area farming for (i) each English county and (ii) each farm business survey county group; and how employment related to less favoured area farming ranks in terms of other classes of industrial employment for (1) each English county and (2) each farm business survey county group.

Mrs. Shephard: The table provides estimates of the number of full-time workers, including all spouses, on all agricultural holdings and on those holdings which are wholly or mainly in the less favoured areas as recorded in the agricultural census at June 1992. Also supplied are estimates of the total employment as recorded in the Department of Employment's Labour Force Survey.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average age of less-favoured area farmers in (a) each English county and (b) each farm business survey county group.

Mrs. Shephard: The Farm Structure Survey 1990 contains information on the age of the holder of the farm by age band for a sample of about 40,000 holdings in England. The table provides estimates of the average age of holder based on analysis of this age band data for farms which are wholly or mainly in the less favoured area. The Farm Business Survey also collects data on the age of the holder from a smaller sample of holdings. The average age of holder in England in 1992-93 on holdings wholly and mainly in the less favoured areas, based on this source, was 51.

Farm Structure Survey 1990
[1] The holder of the farm is the person legally or economically responsible for the holding.
[2] Only those counties which contain holdings which are wholly or mainly in the less-favoured area are shown.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average level of indebtedness of all (a) SDA, (b) DA and (c) less-favoured area farms and for (i) SDA, (ii) DA and (iii) less-favoured area farms larger than eight ESUs for (1) each English county and (2) each farm business survey county group.

Mrs. Shephard: Information on farm indebtedness is available from the Farm Business Survey which collects data from a sample of farms classified as full time—that is, with eight ESU or more. The sample for the Farm Business Survey is intended to provide estimates for three regions of England. The results for individual FBS provinces are liable to larger margins of error than for these regions and results are not available for individual counties. For those provinces for which there is a large enough sample for average results to be provided, the table provides weighted estimates of the total external liabilities and total external liabilities as a percentage of total assets for farms classified as cattle and sheep LFA for the 1992-93 accounting year. Comparable information for farms with less than eight ESU is not available.

Less-favoured areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 277, what was the minimum level of agricultural activity equivalent 30, 21 and 15 years ago.

Mrs. Shephard: The details of the system of farm classification has changed several times over the period from 1964. In 1964, 1973 and 1979 size was measured by standard man days. In 1979 size was also measured in terms of European size units for the purposes of analysing the Farm Business Survey.

The SMD coefficients for each hectare of crops or head of livestock changed in 1963, 1968 and 1976 and the threshold for defining full time also changed. The table shows the changes for the years requested.

Year / Basis for measurement of size	1964 1963 SMD	1973 1968 SMD	1979 1976 SMD	1972-1974 ESU

Minimum number of either:
beef cows	[2]61	[2]66	[2]62	37
or ewes	[3]219	[3]314	[3]395	[4]400

[1] Four ESU was used as the lower size unit in conjunction with a requirement that farms must also have at least one annual labour unit.
[2] Assuming 0·5 hectares of permanent grass and 1·25 hectares of rough grazing per beef cow.
[3] Assuming 0·05 hectares of permanent grass and 0·125 hectares of rough grazing per ewe.
[4] Assuming one lamb per ewe.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the latest year for which the individual figures are available for the Scottish blood transfusion service the total number of units of (a) red cell concentrate, (b) platelet (1) single donor and (2) random, (c) fresh frozen plasma, (d) cryoprecipitate and (e) other plasma derived products which are dispensed (i) within the national health service in Scotland, (ii) within the United Kingdom, excluding Scotland, within the national health service, (iii) to non-national health service establishments within Scotland, (iv) to non-national health service establishments within the United Kingdom, excluding Scotland and (v) to non-national health service establishments outwith the United Kingdom; and what was the total income to the Scottish blood transfusion service from each of these transactions.

Medical Teaching and Research

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board for each year since 1991, the additional costs of teaching and research, allocated at constant 1991 prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Allocations for the additional costs of teaching and research were made to the four teaching health boards as follows:

	£ million (at constant 1991-92 prices)
Health Board	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Grampian	15·186	16·061	15·700	15·311
Greater Glasgow	32·821	32·691	29·692	29·329
Lothian	26·112	27·714	25·916	25·226
Tayside	15·628	16·305	14·534	14·323

Notes:
1. Allocations for 1991-92 were based on actual student numbers from two years before, ie 1989-90. From 1992-93 onwards, allocations have been based on estimated student numbers for the year of allocation.
2. From 1993-94 onwards no additional costs of teaching and research have been made for dental students but the running costs of dental hospitals continue to be met.

Royal Alexandra Health Trust

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will commission an inquiry into the first year of operation of the Royal Alexandra Health Trust, with particular reference to budgets, waiting lists, staff morale and the effectiveness of patient care;

(2) what were the planned (a) revenue and (b) capital budgets for the Royal Alexandra Hospital Trust at the levels set on 1 April 1993 for the 1993-94 financial year; what out-turn figures were achieved on these figures as at 31 March; what is the reason for any variance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: No. The trust is required to publish an annual report on its operations and this has to be presented to a public meeting by 30 September.

Revenue budgets are related to income and are set by the trust when contract negotiations have been completed with trust income for the year determined. For 1993-94 the total income was forecast as £42·6 million. The capital expenditure permissible by the trust in 1993-94 as part of the external financing limit set by the management executive was £1,036,000.

The out-turn figures for the year ended 31 March 1994 are not yet available. The trust is confident that it will meet the following statutory financial targets:

to break even after interest payments, to make a 6 per cent. return on relevant net assets and to deliver the agreed EFL.

Public Sanitation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he, or any of the Ministers in his Department, last paid an official visit to a public water works, water pumping station or reservoir to assess the needs of the public sanitation industry.

Sir Hector Monro: My hon. Friend the Minister for Education and Housing paid an official visit to Lothian regional council's department of water and drainage on 21 September 1989. He inspected the Seafield sewage treatment works and Levenhall and River Esk pumping stations. Water and sewerage matters have also been discussed at the normal ministerial meetings with councils' representatives.

Whisky Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has consulted the Scotch whisky industry on the economic impact on it of the proposed restructuring and possible future privatisation of water and sewerage services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no proposals for privatisation of water and sewerage services in Scotland. We have corresponded with distilling industry interests about the reorganisation of water and sewerage. This industry has also been represented at meetings with Scottish Office officials. The views of the industry have been noted and exchanges will continue to take place in the usual way.

Braille Ballot Papers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to provide Braille ballot papers at polling stations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The issue of electoral forms design is currently being reviewed by a working group set up after the 1992 general election under the aegis of the Secretaries of State for the Home Departments.

Blair Castle

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance has been provided by Scottish Enterprise or any of its subsidiary bodies to the Duke of Atholl, his estate or any company with which he is financially associated for the refurbishment and restoration of Blair castle, its gardens and estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: This is essentially an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise company for the area, Scottish Enterprise Tayside. However, I understand that Scottish Enterprise Tayside has a training for work contract with Training Craft, a subsidiary of Scottish Conservation Projects, which currently uses the Hercules gardens at Blair castle as a project site to train adults in conservation and horticultural skills. The estate contributes substantially towards the costs of the project including those of all materials and equipment and towards some of the costs of the training supervisor and of transporting trainees to the site.

School Buses

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve safety standards on buses and coaches used to transport children to school; if he will specify the regulations which govern the transport of children to school; what proposals he has to amend these regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Matters relating to the safety of school transport including regulations are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The Department of Transport is currently considering the full technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts to all seats in minibuses and coaches and matters such as the three for two concession.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has agreed to a request from Strathclyde regional council for a capping disregard for additional current expenditure in 1994-95 in respect of the additional cost to the council of dropping the three for two rule on dedicated school transport contract vehicles and requiring the fitting of seat belts on all contract minibuses.

Physiotherapy

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current length of waiting time for physiotherapy services in the Argyll and Clyde health board area; what plans he has to improve this waiting time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information on waiting times for physiotherapy services is not collected centrally. Argyll and Clyde health board has received an allocation of £244·7 million for 1994-95 which, together with efficiency savings, represents an increase of 7·1 per cent. over the general allocation in the previous year. It is for the health board to decide on how to use these resources to secure reductions in waiting times for physiotherapy services and other services. I understand that the board has increased the level of funding available for paramedical services, including physiotherapy services, for 1994-95 by £100,000; and in addition, a further sum of £105,000 has been allocated for staffing a pilot study of direct access by general practitioners to physiotherapy services in one part of the board's area.

Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reason he was unable to agree to meet the regional chairman of Strathclyde children's panel as requested in a letter dated 8 March, to discuss the impact on disturbed and vulnerable children of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 April 1994]: The chairman of Strathclyde children's panel is one of a number of people concerned with the care of children who have made representations about the possible effects of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill. We take all such representations seriously. Unfortunately my right hon. Friend's ministerial commitments do not allow him to meet all those concerned with different aspects of the Bill, but the chairman and her fellow office-bearers have been offered a meeting with Scottish Office officials.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether local enterprise companies and their contractors are required to comply with the codes of practice issued by the Government on access to official information.

Mr. Stewart: The new code of practice on Government information came into force on 4 April 1994. The code applies to central Government Departments, their agencies and a number of other public bodies. The local enterprise companies are limited companies and the code does not therefore apply to them or to their contractors.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for requiring local enterprise companies (a) to implement quality assurance arrangements in fulfilment of their training duties and (b) to fulfil equal opportunities requirements.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no such proposals. The Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990 lays upon Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise the duty, which may not be delegated, of keeping under continuous review the suitability and adequacy of any training provided by the two bodies or by their agents. In respect of equal opportunities, each local enterprise company, as part of its contractual agreement with either of the two bodies, is committed to providing equal opportunities regardless of race, sex or disability in the delivery of all its training programmes.

Serviced Sites

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made by Scottish Enterprise of the supply of serviced sites of various sizes in Scotland and their adequacy; and if he will publish the information.

Mr. Stewart: This is essentially an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise. I understand that Scottish Enterprise receives information about sites in both public and private sector ownership. Much of the information is, however, supplied on a voluntary and confidential basis and Scottish Enterprise does not therefore plan to publish it.

Health Service Staff, Ayrshire and Arran

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what staff were employed in all aspects of the health service except in general practice in Ayrshire and Arran as at 1 January 1992, 1993 and 1994 in each of the categories (a) professional administration of the service, with no direct medical or nursing responsibilities, (b) practising medical staff and (c) practising nursing staff; and what was the cost of salaries and related expenses in each of the three categories in each of the last three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The information requested is shown in the tables. The figures in table 1 are as at 30 September while those in table 2 are available only at 31 March.

Table 1

[1]Includes general managers, senior managers, staff on grades 7 and above and staff on protected grades. Protected grades may include some staff on grades less than 7.
Excludes nursing management staff and teachers.
[2]Includes staff on grades 1 to 6.
[3]Includes directors of public health/chief area medical officers and unit medical officers.
Excludes general medical practitioners and locum appointments.
[4]1993 figures are provisional.
[5]Includes nursing management staff and teachers.
Excludes agency and bank nurses.
[6]Students on '1992' courses and programmes in midwifery are not directly funded by the health board and are therefore excluded from the nursing staff totals.

[1] No figures are available for "Professional administration of the Service, with no direct medical or nursing responsibilities" as this is not separately identified in health board annual accounts. The figures supplied are the total salaries and wages for administration within the board and include those senior nurses and clinicians who have transferred to general/senior manager pay scales.
[2] Includes specialists.

Coastal and Flood Defences

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of his Department's policy on coastal and flood defence in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office policy on coastal and flood defence is aimed at reducing the risks to people and the environment from flooding and coastal erosion by encouraging the provision of defence measures which are technically, environmentally and economically sound and sustainable. Delivery of these objectives is for local authorities, who are well able to determine the needs of their areas. Schemes promoted by the councils and approved by the Secretary of State attract grant aid towards the eligible costs.

Glasgow Development Agency

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the leisure and leisure-related projects which Glasgow development agency has contributed, is contributing, and proposes to contribute to since it was set up, and the total amounts contributed to each such project.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally. This is primarily an operational matter best taken up direct with the local enterprise company. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of the Glasgow development agency about the matter.

Overgrazing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many farmers have been approached by his officials to discuss ways of reducing overgrazing in each year since the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many hill livestock compensatory allowances he has withheld in 1992, 1993 and 1994 as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what procedures are in place to monitor whether overgrazing has reduced following the withholding of hill livestock compensatory allowances as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance clause;

(4) what procedures are in place to monitor whether meetings between his officials and producers to discuss ways of reducing overgrazing have led to reductions in overgrazing;

(5) what procedures are in place to reduce environmental damage caused through overgrazing consequent on that damage continuing after hill livestock compensatory allowances are withheld as a result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause;

(6) how many farmers have had hill livestock compensatory allowances withheld in 1992, 1993 and 1994 as a direct result of the introduction of the hill livestock compensatory allowance overgrazing clause.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 April 1994]: Overgrazing is assessed by agricultural officers of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department as part of the inspection programme for the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme. Discussions take place with farmers frequently about stocking rates; to date no HLCAs have been withheld because of overgrazing. The operation of the overgrazing provisions of the HLCA scheme is kept under review in individual cases by the agricultural officers concerned and more generally by the Department.

Livestock Allowances

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the budget, in real and nominal terms for Scotland in (i) 1991, (ii) 1992, (iii) 1993 and (iv) his estimate for 1994 for (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium and (c) the beef special premium.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The table shows expenditure by financial year under the sheep annual premium, the suckler cow premium and the beef special premium schemes in nominal terms and at constant 1991-92 prices.

Scottish Office Pensions Agency

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what key performance targets he has set the Scottish Office Pensions Agency for 1994-95.

Mr. Lang: I have set the Scottish Office Pensions Agency the following key targets for 1994-95, which cover important areas of service delivery and steps to improve efficiency and effectiveness.

1. To ensure that awards and transfer payments are accurate to within 1 per cent. of their value in 98 per cent. of cases, as compared with the 1993-94 target of 2 per cent. in 97 per cent. of cases.

2. To pay on time 99 per cent. of all pensions and lump sums where the target date for receipt of claims is met.

3. To make transfer payments within four weeks of members' final instructions to transfer pension rights.

4. To carry out a survey to measure customer satisfaction with administration of the national health service superannuation scheme, to analyse the results, and to produce proposals for necessary improvement.

5. To produce a "plain English" charter standard statement, by July 1994.

6. To award a contract for development and supply of a new pensions administration information technology system by July 1994, and to reach the last key 1994-95 milestone in the implementation plan.

7. To optimise use of budgetary provision while keeping within direct running costs limits.

8. To provide policy advice which is consistent with public service pension policy and takes account of operational objectives of Scottish Office departments, within the required time scales.

Firearm and Shotgun Certificates

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total sum received in Scotland for (a) firearm certificates and (b) shotgun certificates during 1993 or the most recent year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The approximate sum received in Scotland during 1993 was £401,600 for firearm certificates and £371,000 for shotgun certificates.

Monklands District Council

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received a reply to the letter he wrote to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr.

Smith) on 3 February requesting information in the right hon. and learned Member's possession which would be relevant to consideration of whether there should be a statutory inquiry into Monklands district council.

Mr. Lang: No. I have received no response to my request for such information, either to my letter of 3 February, or to my subsequent letter to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) of 8 February.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Business Appointments (Crown Servants)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Crown servants in each Government Department applied through the business appointments system to take up an outside appointment (a) as a consultant and (b) otherwise; how many were referred to the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments; and how many were granted in each year since 1986.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not all available in the form requested. Most applications are considered only by Departments. Details of those cases are not held centrally. The following tables give the total number of Crown servants in each year who made an application that was approved in consultation with the Cabinet Office. Figures are broken down by numerically significant departments. They show the numbers of applications to undertake independent consultancy and other work and, in each category, how many applications were referred to the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments. They also show how many applications were approved unconditionally, or were approved with conditions.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 767-68, if he will publish the results of the analysis of applications received in respect of the 1994 charter mark scheme and the analysis of the responses and sales in respect of each HMSO campaign.

Mr. David Davis: We propose to conduct and publish research into the effectiveness and promotion of the 1994 charter mark scheme in the autumn after the awards are made.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 14 March, Official Report, column 488, which gives details of sales in respect of each HMSO campaign. Sales of British Standards Institution titles now exceed £200,000. Detailed analysis of the responses to each campaign are commercially confidential.

Research Establishments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, columns 87-96, what were the totals for (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland of (i) spending by publicly-funded research bodies on research establishments and (ii) numbers of staff employed; and what each of those figures represents as a percentage of the United Kingdom total.

Mr. David Davis: This information is not available in the form requested. The table gives a breakdown of total spending by research councils on their establishments for the period 1992-93 and the percentage each figure represents of the United Kingdom total.

	£ million	Per cent.
England	406·1	87·7
Wales	17·1	3·7
Scotland	39·6	8·6
Northern Ireland	0·1	—
Total	462·9	100·0

For details on the staffing of research council establishments, I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 21 March, Official Report, columns 87-96.

Electronic Mail (Interception)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what research has been sponsored by the Government scientific research grants into development of encryption technology to protect data transmitted by electronic mail from illicit interception.

Mr. Waldegrave: Research council funding has supported recent projects at five universities on the development of encryption technology, which have included work to protect data transmitted by electronic mail. The projects studied: the design and analysis of encryption algorithms, real-time compression and encryption of information in multi-media network, formal analysis of cryptographic protocols and finite automation cryptography. Funding has also been provided for a current project in the LINK personal communications programme on security studies for third generation mobile telecommunications systems.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his evaluation of the likely time taken to provide information to inquirers who apply under his new code of practice on Government information in cases which are referred to the ombudsman for evaluation.

Mr. Waldegrave: This will vary from case to case, but the ombudsman has said that he hopes to be able to complete investigations of this nature in a matter of weeks.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out the reasons for the exclusion of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee from the list of bodies covered by his code of practice on access to governmental information.

Mr. Waldegrave: Paragraph 6 of the code states that it applies to those Government Departments and other bodies within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, the ombudsman. The radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee is not within the ombudsman's jurisdiction and is not therefore covered by the code.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) of 29 March, Official Report, columns 608-9, how many inquiries have been received at the telephone point mentioned to obtain copies of his code of practice on open government; and what responses to his consultation on the draft code of practice led to the change made to paragraph 15 on statutory and other restrictions.

Mr. Waldegrave: Some 242 such inquiries had been received up to and including 15 April. The responses from the Campaign for Freedom of Information, published in its "Secrets" newspaper, the Consumers Association, the Guild of British Newspaper Editors and the Data Protection Registrar raised general issues about exemption (xv) of the draft code of practice which were taken into account in making the change described in my answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 26.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish his estimate of the annual operating costs of local government in Wales at constant prices for the last three years, together with his estimate for the next three years.

Mr. Redwood: The annual operating costs of local government include administration, personnel and other running expenses. Such operating costs cannot be fully identified from information held centrally. However, the available information is given in the following table. Information for future years and the 1993-94 and 1994-95 figures for revenue expenditure on administration are not yet available.

Local authority revenue expenditure, 1994-95 prices (£ million)

	Net revenue expenditure[1]	Revenue expenditure on administration[2]
1991-92 outturn	2,561·6	361·3
1992-93 outturn[3]	2,632·2	391·6
1993-94 budget	2,579·4	—
1994-95[3]	2,608·0	—

[1] All general fund revenue spending including community council precepts. No adjustments have been made for transfers of responsibility to or from local authority control—that is, the transfer out of further and higher education responsibilities in 1992 and 1993.

[2] Identifiable gross expenditure on administration, including spending on central administration—that is, personnel management—and administration costs normally accounted for within specific services—that is, education etc.

[3] Provisional.

School Governors

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to promote the establishment of an independent body to represent school governors in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: County associations of governing bodies are being formed in various LEAs in Wales. I am sure that they will exercise a valuable representative function and act as a channel for information to and from governors. The formation of an all-Wales body would be a welcome development.

ENVIRONMENT

Noise Pollution

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are being taken to reduce the various forms of noise pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The independent noise review working party established by my Department in 1990 considered noise pollution in all its forms and we have subsequently implemented over half its recommendations.

The Environmental Protection Act 1990 strengthened the statutory nuisance legislation which is available for local authorities to control noise from domestic, industrial and commercial premises. These powers have been further extended by the Noise and Statutory Nuisance Act 1993 to control noise from vehicles, machinery and equipment in the street. My Department has, jointly with the Home Office, issued specific guidance on how best to use statutory powers to control all forms of noisy parties and issues general advice about how to pursue noise complaints.

Separating noisy activities from those most likely to be affected by them can be achieved by a variety of formal and informal mechanisms. We hope shortly to publish a planning policy guidance note which will describe how the planning system can be used to minimise the adverse impact of noise, for example on residential development. We also continue to liaise with, and support, professional and other bodies which are keen to develop and publish their own codes of practice for minimising noise. Codes currently in preparation include guidance on clay pigeon shooting and stock car racing.

There is much concern about the rising number of complaints about neighbour noise and we are keeping under review the effectiveness of legal and informal remedies. We believe that mediation services have an important role to play in resolving such disputes in a more cost-effective and appropriate way. My Department has funded two pilot studies in order to give local authorities a clearer picture of the benefits of establishing such services.

Building Inspections

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to set up a body to approve inspections under the powers given to him in regulation 4 of the Building (Approved Inspections etc.) Regulations 1985.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's proposals were set out in a consultation paper "Guidelines for the Approval of Inspectors" dated 29 October 1993. A copy has been placed in the Library. The way forward in the light of the responses to this consultation is still being considered.

Planning Inspectorate

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what were the factors which produced an increase in the daily rates charged by the planning inspectorate of his Department in September 1991; and what were the mechanisms for its approval;

(2) for what reason an increase to five days' writing time per day of sitting was imposed by his planning inspectorate for its attendance at the 1991-92 public inquiry into the Birmingham unitary development plan; and what account was taken in deciding on the increase in writing time of the formal request for the report to be concise;

(3) what was the cause of the delay of the report of his planning inspectorate at the public inquiry into the Birmingham UDP;

(4) if he will make it his policy for fees charged by the planning inspectorate to local authorities to be limited to three writing days per sitting day.

Mr. Baldry: The provision of information on development plan inquiries is the responsibility of the planning inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Stephen Crow, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from H. S. Crow to Ms Estelle Morris, dated 20 April 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the public inquiry into the Birmingham Unitary Development Plan.

It may be helpful if I explain that the public inquiry into objections to the Birmingham Unitary Development Plan sat for 35 days between 19 November 1991 and 14 February 1992. The Inspector spent 5 additional days in carrying out post-inquiry site visits. The Inspector's report was despatched to Birmingham City Council on 6 October 1992, and took 112 working days to complete.

Normally Inspectors are able to complete their inquiry reports within a time period of three reporting days per sitting/site visit day, hence the 3:1 guideline used by the Planning Inspectorate. The Inspectorate did not impose an increase to "five days writing time per day of sitting" for the Inspector to complete his report on the inquiry he was appointed to hold. The Inspector, aided by an assistant Inspector because of the size of the task, completed his report in a ratio of 2·8 reporting days to sitting/site visit days. The ratio of reporting days to inquiry sitting days was only 3·2.

I would not agree that the Inspector's report was unduly delayed. I understand that, although Birmingham City Council had asked for the report to be made available by the end of June 1992, no undertaking was given that this would be achieved. The inquiry was a complex one, and in the circumstances I consider the Inspector and assistant Inspector did well to complete their report in the timescale achieved, and indeed they did so within the normal guideline of 3 reporting days per sitting/site visit day. In any case though I would stress that this is only a guideline, and can be affected by many unpredictable factors which are mostly outside the Inspector's control.

The Inspector's report was written in the concise form now generally adopted, summarising objectors' cases and the Council's response. This approach was instrumental in helping the Inspector's to produce the report in the short time noted above.

You also asked about the increase in the daily fees charged for Inspectors taking plan inquiries, effective from September 1991. This increase, the final stage in a series of phased increases designed to effect recovery of the full costs of supplying Inspectors for development plan inquiries, was approved by the Minister then responsible for planning matters and advised to all local planning authorities engaged in development plan inquiries. This charge applied to the time spent by Inspectors on preparation work, inquiry sitting days, travelling time, site visits and report writing. It is the Secretary of State's continuing policy that fees charged by the Inspectorate for the services of Inspectors to take development plan inquiries should reflect the full cost of the service provided to local authorities. The fees are subject to regular review.

Planning Applications

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to allow local planning authorities to set their own fee levels for planning applications; and whether these fee levels will be subject to market testing.

Mr. Baldry: I refer to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning gave to the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 1102-03.

As market testing applies only to central Government activities, it would not be appropriate in this context. There will, however, be safeguards to ensure that local authority fees for planning applications are kept at a reasonable level.

UN Sustainable Development Commission

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to announce the outcome of the meeting of the United Nations Sustainable Development Commission to be held in May.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend will be attending the second session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in May and looks forward to playing a full role in a productive outcome. It is for the Commission to report its outcome to the United Nations Economic and Social Council. We have no plans at present to make a separate announcement.

Access to Tenancies (Consultation)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in response to the consultation paper, "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies"; and when he proposes to publish his own response to them.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 12 April to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), Official Report, column 132. We hope to announce the Government's conclusions during the summer.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to get the messages of sustainable development across to the general public.

Mr. Gummer: I have today appointed Professor Graham Ashworth as chairman of the new public environment initiative which was announced in the United Kingdom "Strategy for Sustainable Development", published in January. The aim of the initiative, to be known as "Going for Green", will be to increase people's awareness of the part their personal choices can play in delivering sustainable development, and to enlist their support and commitment in the coming years.

Council Tax

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when a domestic property is rebanded for council tax purposes on sale and repurchase, what date the rebanding is backdated to and when this date will be reviewed.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 19 April 1994]: Under the Council Tax (Alteration of Lists and Appeals) Regulations 1993, an alteration to the valuation list made to correct an inaccuracy in the list on the day it was compiled—that is, 1 April 1993—however the inaccuracy may have come to light, has effect from that day. An alteration made to correct a subsequent inaccuracy has effect from the day on which the list became inaccurate. An alteration following a material increase in the value of a dwelling since the list was compiled, for example as a result of home improvement, has effect from the date the dwelling is next sold.

My right hon. Friend now proposes to amend these arrangements so that in future any increases in bandings to correct inaccuracies in the original list will come into effect only from the day the list is altered. Decreases would, however, continue to take effect from 1 April 1993. Further details will be announced shortly.

Industrial Units Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects approved under, and the regional distribution of, expenditure incurred within the industrial units scheme since its inception.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The Department offered grants totalling £4·07 million to institutions which were successful in the support for industrial units scheme competition. The institutions were listed in the DTI press notice of 11 June 1992 and I am sending a copy to the hon. Member. I am unable to disclose details of the individual grants for reasons of confidentiality.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to publish the report on the first five-yearly review of the work of the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: When completed, it is planned that the review will be made publicly available.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of the population were eligible for (a) civil and (b) criminal legal aid in (i) 1964-65, (ii) 1979-80, (iii) 1992-93, (iv) 1993-94 and (v) 1994-95.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department has no estimate of eligibility in 1964-65. Estimates of the proportion of households eligible for civil legal aid for the other years are:

Year	Per cent.
1979-80	77
1992-93	53
1993-94	48
1994-95	47

There is no upper financial limit for criminal legal aid. Anyone whose financial resources are such that he or she requires assistance in meeting the costs which may be incurred is eligible, subject to the interests of justice test and the payment of a contribution where appropriate.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received from (a) hon. Members, (b) peers, (c) other individuals and (d) organisations about the current state of the legal aid system and legal aid eligibility; and what proportion such representations bear to the total number of representations on all subjects.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested. From 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994, my Department received around 990 letters from hon. Members about all aspects of the legal aid scheme. This is 16 per cent. of correspondence with Members. Over the same period the Department received about 1,000 letters from individuals and organisations about legal aid, about 9 per cent. of all correspondence with the public. These figures do not include representations from major interest groups or from peers, which are not separately logged.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of the consultants appointed to the Legal Aid Board's research project into the delivery of legal services.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Policy Studies Institute.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research his Department has conducted into the impact on access to justice made by the changes to legal aid eligibility and to the green form scheme in April 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: We are continuing to monitor the changes, which appear to have had broadly the effect anticipated. The Legal Aid Board will be conducting research into cases where offers of contributory legal aid are made by the board but are not taken up by the applicants and my Department is monitoring the incidence in the courts of unrepresented litigants in civil cases.

Court Funds Office

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has either to abolish or to privatise the functions of the court funds office; and what research his Department has done into the impact of such reforms on injured minors and the mentally ill.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The court funds office will be part of the Public Trust Office when it is established as an executive agency in the second half of 1994. At the Lord Chancellor's request, work is being carried out currently to examine whether the functions of the court funds office are necessary and to assess the impact of any changes.

Courts Charter

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints have been received and what amount of compensation for errors and delays has been paid out by county courts in (a) London and (b) the rest of England and Wales for each month since the implementation of the courts charter.

Mr. John M. Taylor: From the introduction of the courts charter in January 1993 until the end of March 1994 there have been 1,802 complaints about county courts in London and 5,399 about those in the rest of England and Wales. In the same period the amount of compensation paid out for errors and delays in the county courts was £146,800·68 for those in London and £226,928·61 for those in the rest of England and Wales.

It is not possible to provide the information requested on a monthly basis except at disproportionate cost.

Law Students

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the recommendation by Lord Justice Steyn, chair of the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct, that prospective solicitors and barristers should undertake an initial joint vocational course; and how many representations he has received, and from whom, concerning Lord Justice Steyn's recommendation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No recommendation about joint vocational training for barristers and solicitors has been made by Lord Justice Steyn or the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct. The Lord Chancellor and I await the results of the advisory committee's review into legal education, which will be completed in September 1995, with interest.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the percentage of students taking (a) the legal practice course/Law Society finals and (b) Bar finals who were in receipt of (i) full assistance and (ii) partial assistance from their local education authority for the payment of the course fees for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect these figures. However, from information provided by the Council of Legal Education and the College of Law, it appears that the position is as follows:

Council of Legal Education[1]

Year	Full fees per cent.	Part fees per cent.
1989-90	47	20
1990-91	46	16
1991-92	29	19
1992-93	14	26
1993-94	6	14

[1] The current vocational course replaced the old style Bar finals course in the academic year 1989-90.

College of Law[1]
Percentage of fees paid by local authorities[2]

Year	Per cent.
1989-90	64
1990-91	57
1991-92	35

Year	Per cent.
1992-93	23
1993-94	9

[1] The Law Society only has information on students at the College of Law and not those studying for the vocational stage at other institutions. The College of Law provides approximately 65 per cent. of all places on the legal practice course.

[2] Information was not available on the breakdown between payment of full and partial fees, only on the total percentage of fees payable by local education authorities.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research his Department has undertaken into the impact on (a) women and (b) members of the ethnic minorities of the non-availability of mandatory grants for the fees for the requisite vocational courses for those wishing to become barristers or solicitors; and if he will publish this research.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has not undertaken any research into this area.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research his Department has done into the correlation between the non-availability of mandatory grants for the fees for the requisite vocational courses for prospective lawyers and the level of representation of women and members of the ethnic minorities among (a) Queen's Counsel and (b) the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Trial Delays

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of defendants (a) in custody and (b) on bail are not dealt with in the target times set out in the Courts Charter; what number of defendants (i) in custody and (ii) on bail this affects on average each month; how many defendants in custody have to wait more than (1) three months, (2) six months and (3) 12 months before trial; and what percentages of defendants in custody these numbers represent.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The available information covering the year 1993 is shown in the table. Statistics on the number of defendants in custody waiting more than 12 months before trial at the Crown court and the distribution of waiting times at magistrates courts are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Committals for trial to the Crown court: defendants whose waiting time for trial exceeded certain periods in 1993

Type of remand and waiting time	Defendants exceeding waiting time
	Percentage	Average number per month
In custody:
8 weeks	51	906
12 weeks	33	575
26 weeks	11	196
On bail
16 weeks	36	1,950

Notes:

1. The data are provisional.

2 The Courts Charter waiting time guidelines are eight weeks for defendants in custody and 16 weeks for defendants on bail.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the longest period for which a defendant has had to wait in custody before trial in the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Court Closures

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number and the names of all the courts and caller offices which he has determined to close in the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the five-year period from April 1989 to March 1994 my Department has closed 22 county courts or caller offices and five Crown court centres. I set out a full list of their names in the table.

Court closures for the five year period April 1989—March 1994

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes he is planning to make to the formula by which funds are allocated to local magistrates courts committees in order to make better provision for special spending needs in some areas; and what representations he has received concerning the current formula from (a) magistrates courts committees and (b) other individuals or organisations.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A review of the current formula is being conducted by a small working group comprising Lord Chancellor's Department officials and representatives from the magistrates courts service. Their provisional findings are expected by the summer to allow sufficient time for consultation with all interested parties before any revised formula is used to allocate grant for the 1995-96 financial year. A number of views about the present formula have been received from both magistrates courts committees and others and are being taken into account by the working group.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received concerning the operation of the magistrates courts service inspectorate; and when he expects its first annual report to be published.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In September 1992 my Department issued a consultation document on the role of the inspectorate, to which 92 substantive responses were received. A list of respondents was appended to Decision Paper No. 4, published in May 1993, available from the House of Commons Library. The Department has also received some 1,170 letters, direct or through hon. Members, on various aspects of the matters now encompassed in the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill. Some of these touched upon the inspectorate.

The chief inspector of the magistrates courts service published the inspectorate's first annual report on Tuesday 12 April. Copies are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

County Court Forms

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the statutory obstacles mentioned in paragraph 126 of section A of his departmental report, Cm 2509, that led to the withdrawal of the county court bulk centre from the first round programme of market testing.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The statutory obstacle referred to is section 27 of the Courts Act 1971.

Small Courts

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to close small courts processing 20,000 units of work or less or small courts within 15 miles of larger courts; what number of county courts in London such a policy would leave in operation; and if he will publish his Department's full accommodation plan for the next three years and his Department's specific plans for small courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Each case for closure is considered on its merits, taking into account the need to provide an acceptable standard of service in the area generally. The level of work load and proximity to larger courts with good facilities are factors which are taken into account. All closure proposals are subject to wide public consultation. My Department is not planning to close automatically all county courts processing 20,000 units of work or less, or small courts within 15 miles of larger courts. If such a policy were pursued none of the London county courts would be affected.

It is not intended to publish the Department's provisional accommodation plan, because some of the elements it will contain are being reviewed as part of the fundamental review of public expenditure.

Compensation

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which court has (a) received the most complaints and (b) had to pay out the most compensation for errors and delays; and what plans he has for regular publication of the figures for compensation payments.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The highest number of complaints was received by the Central London county court which also had to pay out the most compensation for errors and delays. In the period January 1993 to March 1994 1,563 complaints were received and £60,636·59 paid out in compensation. Central London county court was created, in 1992, by the merger of the Westminster and Bloomsbury county courts. The process of amalgamation was inevitably difficult and led to a marked reduction in the standard of service. These initial problems are now resolved, and the number of complaints fell to 85 in the first three months of this year.

There are no plans for regular publication of these figures.

Public Trust Office

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to (a) contract out, (b) place in the control of an executive agency or (c) privatise the functions of the Public Trust Office Agency; and what reserch his Department has done into the impact of such reforms on (i) minors who have been awarded damages and (ii) private trusts serviced by the executorship and administration service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Public Trust Office will become an executive agency in the second half of 1994 as part of the Government's "next steps" programme. The Lord Chancellor made the decision following a study of the work done by the Public Trust Office and how best to meet the needs of users of its services. At the Lord Chancellor's request, further work is being carried out to examine the continuing need for a trustee service provided by the public sector and whether the functions undertaken by the court funds office are necessary.

TREASURY

Personal Allowances

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Exchequer in a full year of allowing husbands and wives with insufficient income to absorb their personal allowance of £3,445 to transfer the unused balance of this allowance to their partner, assuming that the transferred allowance (a) may be claimed at the earning spouses' highest rate and (b) is restricted to the 25 per cent. rate.

Mr. Dorrell: The Exchequer cost in a full year at 1994-95 income levels is estimated to be about £3 billion if the transferred allowance were available at the recipient's marginal rate of tax and £2¾ billion if the transferred allowances were not available at the higher rate. This estimate does not take into account any behavioural changes which could result from such a measure.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of official entertaining in his Department in each year since 1990-91; if he will list the receptions held in each year at his Department's expense; and what was the cost of each reception.

Sir John Cope: Expenditure on official entertainment in 1990-91 was £51,424, in 1991-92, £85,873, in 1992-93, £303,523 and in 1993-94, £70,239.

Expenditure on receptions has been taken to mean formal hospitality provided largely for the benefit of people from outside the Department, excluding lunches and dinners. In those cases where the cost can be separately identified, expenditure was as follows:

1991-92
Press reception	1,048·21
1992-93
Press reception	622·50
Russian secondees reception	627·00

The large increase in total expenditure on official entertainment in 1992-93 reflects the cost of the informal ECOFIN Council during the United Kingdom Presidency of the EC and the cost of the 1992 conference of the International Organisation of Securities Commissions, for which the United Kingdom was the host. The bulk of the expenditure on these events was on conferences and related facilities. Opening receptions were held, but the cost is not separately identifiable.

VAT

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 820, if he will list the outstanding balance for the collection of the value added tax default surcharge for each year since 1988, including 1993, as a percentage of default surcharge collected.

Sir John Cope: Table of default surcharge outstanding at 31 March as a percentage of default surcharge collected:

Year	Amount collected per year £ million	Amount collected year on year (cumulative total) £ million	Balance outstanding year on year (cumulative total) £ million	Percentage
1988	25·1	25·1	50·7	202
1989	79·2	104·2	61·7	59
1990	82·1	186·3	74·9	40
1991	83·2	269·5	102·7	38
1992	92·5	362·0	132·3	37
1993	96·0	458·0	116·3	25

The percentages shown for 1988-93 are based on year-on-year cumulative totals at 31 March of the default surcharge outstanding and the default surcharge collected.

Some of the payments collected during any given year may relate to assessments issued in previous years.

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information technology consultants his Department has employed in each of the last five years; for what purpose; and at what total cost.

Sir John Cope: I regret that information for years before 1991-92 is not available.

The number of IT consultancies and their total cost for 1991-92 and later years is given in the table.

Year	Number	Total cost (£)
1992-93	4	26,000
1993-94	4	53,000

The main work covered is IT support, including software revision and systems development, including work related to the pensions administration system. The firms involved are Bywater plc, ERA Software Ltd., Ground Modelling Systems Ltd., IMS, Jerry Hughes, Moodey International Developments and Dunnit Shaw.

Cameroon

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment has been made of the effects of Cameroon's agreement with the International Monetary Fund for the health and education services in Cameroon; and what steps have been taken by the British director at the IMF to ensure that the structural adjustment programme does not damage health and education programmes;

(2) how the structural adjustment programme recently concluded between the International Monetary Fund and Bulgaria safeguards the poor of that country and its health and education programmes.

Sir John Cope: The IMF and World bank are doing valuable work to help countries such as Cameroon and Bulgaria assess the possible impact that economic reform may have on vulnerable groups, in order that reform can be tailored to meet the needs of individual countries. In their design, IMF and World bank programmes pay particular attention to ensuring that sectors such as health and education are given appropriate priority within the reforming country's budget. The needs of the sectors were explicitly addressed in the cases of Cameroon and Bulgaria. The United Kingdom executive director at the IMF, along with representatives of all the fund's members, considers each proposal for a structural adjustment programme to ensure that the programme is appropriate to the needs of the individual country.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Sir John Cope: No part of Her Majesty's Treasury currently employs private security firms. Private security firms have been employed by Forward, which is now in the private sector, and the rating of government property department, which is now part of the Valuation Office. Details relating to Forward were provided in the answer my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan) on 17 June 1993.

The rating of government property department employed two private security firms sequentially between 1987 and 1992. The contract for the first to 1 April 1989 was for £2,600 per annum; the second was for £4,900 per annum. They involved the provision of one guard.

Inflation

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's target for underlying inflation in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997.

Sir John Cope: The Government's aim is to bring inflation down and then to hold it down. This is the only lasting basis for sustained growth. For the rest of this Parliament our objective is to keep underlying inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments, in the range 1 to 4 per cent. and for inflation to be in the lower part of this range by the end of the Parliament.

Merchant Fleet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on balancing charges for ships and measures to assist the shipping industry.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new measures he now proposes to assist the British merchant fleet.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The health of the merchant fleet is clearly a matter of great concern both inside and outside the House. The Government have made it clear that we recognise the very important contribution which shipping makes to the economy and the essential role which the industry can be called on to play in a national emergency and we have shown in the past our willingness to help with the problems which it faces.

We recognise that it is common for shipping companies overseas to benefit from special tax provisions. We believe that such special provisions introduce distortions which can inhibit competition and lead to the inefficiency allocation of resources. We will be raising these points forcefully with the European Commission.

However, we also recognise that, competitively, tax measures available overseas put our shippers at a particular disadvantage. We have therefore decided to introduce a provision which will allow capital allowance balancing charges for ships to be rolled over for a period of up to three years from the date on which the ship is disposed of, to be set off against subsequent expenditure on ships within that period. The amount of any balancing charge which can be rolled over will be limited to the amount needed to ensure that no tax liability arises as a result of a ship's disposal. We estimate that this measure will benefit the shipping industry by up to £20 million per annum in a full year. In drawing up this provision we will be considering whether it should be restricted to ships on the United Kingdom register; and in doing so will take account of what our European Union partners do.

As with any measure of this sort we have an obligation to notify the Commission of the proposal. Subject to the outcome of discussions with Commission, we will be bringing forward the necessary legislation in next year's Finance Bill, with retrospective effect from today. The draft legislation will be made available by the Inland Revenue as soon as possible.

Treasury Forecasts

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to publish in 1994 the two or more forecasts which the Treasury is required to publish each year under schedule 5 of the Industry Act 1975.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I propose to publish the first Industry Act forecast of 1994 in the summer, probably around late June, in good time for the summer economic debate. The second forecast in 1994 will be published on Budget day.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Agencies (Correspondence)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to ensure under the citizens charter that letters from hon. Members to Government agencies are dealt with speedily; what discussions he has held as to a reasonable time limit in which to expect a reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Reply times to correspondence are frequently covered by agencies' charters and statements of charter standards. Reply times and other charter standards are decided by the Minister responsible for the agency in consultation with the chief executive.

Permanent Secretary (Handbook)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 256, if he will place in the Library those sections of the Permanent Secretary's handbook which do not relate to national security.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have carefully considered the hon. Member's request, but I have nothing to add to my reply of 9 March.

PRIME MINISTER

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance has been issued to Ministers regarding the practice of replying to parliamentary questions in terms such as, "I will write to the hon. Member"; and in what circumstances this practice is considered appropriate.

The Prime Minister: A reply in which a Minister says that he will write to the hon. Member may be given for a number of reasons. It may be used as an interim reply because it is not possible to provide a substantive answer within the time scale laid down, to provide information of specialist or local interest which is detailed or lengthy or where there is a need for discretion in making the full reply available because it concerns a confidential constituent's case.

Following a recommendation from the Procedure Committee, first report, Session 1992-93, guidance has been issued that such replies should also state, except where confidentiality is necessary, that copies of the Minister's reply will be placed in the Library.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 April.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Tigris and Euphrates Valleys

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest information to Her Majesty's Government about malnutrition-related diseases, and the shortage of water-pumps, water-filters and pharmaceuticals in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates.

The Prime Minister: In addition to information given to me by the hon. Member himself, and obtained from non-governmental organisations with local knowledge, information is in the most recent reports from the United Nations and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The reports point out that reliable data are not generally available.

Costs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost to public funds of all his offices, duties, accommodation and expenses in 1993-94.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The No. 10 budget includes the running costs of 10 Downing street and the costs associated with Chequers. A final outturn for 1993-94 is not yet available, but is likely to be some £9·2 million.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will provide the final figure for 1993-94 for (a) the cost of maintaining and running No. 10 Downing street and additional costs at Chequers, (b) the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust and (c) the costs on a consistent basis expressed at 1984-85 prices.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 April 1994]: Final figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. The estimated outturn for the cost of 10 Downing street and Chequers borne on the vote of the Cabinet Office, OPSS, is as follows:

1993-94

£ million

	Cash	1984-85 prices
Number 10 capital and running costs of Chequers	8·9	5·5
Grant-in-aid to Chequers Trust	0·3	0·2
TOTAL	9·2	5·7

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals on environmental protection he plans to put to the Industry Council on 22 April.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no issues relating to the environment on the agenda of the Industry Council on 22 April.

Nynex CableComms

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the extent to which the work being carried out by Nynex CableComms at 28 Oaks avenue, Bolton is in accordance with its licence.

Mr. McLoughlin: The licence held by Nynex CableComms Bolton Ltd. provides for the standard of its street works to be governed by the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 and its associated regulations. I understand that the local highway authority has conducted a sample inspection of the street reinstatement outside 28 Oaks avenue, Bolton as provided for under that Act. The reinstatement was found not to be of the required standard and the cable operator, Nynex CableComms Bolton Ltd., has been asked to remedy this.

GATT

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those countries (a) which are signatories to the new GATT agreement and (b) which are not.

Mr. Needham: A total of 125 countries participated in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, which culminated on 15 April in the signature of the final act at Marrakech. The names of the 125 countries are listed.

Of these 125 countries, a total of 111 signed the final act of the Uruguay round. Countries which did not sign the final act in Marrakech but can do so in the future in Geneva include: Burkina Faso, Chad, Dominica, Gambia, Grenada, Haiti, Lesotho, Maldives, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Sierra Leone, Togo, Rwanda and Swaziland.

Data Encryption

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legislation relating to data encryption his Department is considering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has no current plans to introduce legislation relating to data encryption.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he has taken to ensure that his Department encourages training and enterprise councils in their policies for the development of local enterprise.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department is working closely with training and enterprise councils to develop effective business support measures and to help develop the competitiveness of local businesses. In particular, I have asked the TECs to take the lead in bringing together local partnerships to establish a network of business links in England which will provide a single point of access to a wide range of high quality business advice and support services. Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, I will shortly be publishing strategic guidance for TECs which will emphasise, among others, the importance of developing effective plans for enterprise and ensuring that they mesh into wider programmes of action to improve competitiveness.

Post Offices

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will publish a list of post offices which have closed or merged since April 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a list of post offices which have changed status and become community post offices since April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that, since April 1992, 435 post offices have closed and that there have been three mergers of branch offices. In the same period, 125 offices are known to have reopened. A further 129 post offices have been converted to community office status. A copy of the full list of offices closed and of those converted to community status is being placed in the Library of the House.

Record Industry

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect in financial and business terms he estimates the international piracy and counterfeiting trade have on the British record industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: The British Phonograph Industry, the record industry's trade association, has recently estimated that piracy is depriving the industry of one fifth of its potential export market, resulting in a loss in earnings of £160 million per annum at current values. I am not aware of any other estimates but fully recognise the importance to the industry of effective copyright protection overseas. The Government will continue to work actively to achieve this by all available means including the GATT, current negotiations within the World Intellectual Property Organisation on new international copyright agreements and European Community initiatives.

Rural Sub-post Offices

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has received from north Devon in 1994 about the future of rural sub-post offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has received two representations from north Devon in 1994 about the future of rural sub-post offices. In addition, the chief executive of Devon county council has written on the same subject.

Small and Medium-sized Businesses

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his plans for consulting small and medium-sized enterprises on their needs to ensure that their competitiveness in the European Economic Area according to the Community guidelines for small and medium-sized enterprises.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department continues to be in constant liaison with small and medium-sized enterprises, through discussions and through its research programme. It continues to discuss the needs of SMEs with small firms' representative organisations, academics and other policy makers. My Department also consults the networks of training and enterprise councils, European information centres, and the developing network of business links. This continuing dialogue with SMEs and with all the key players in the field ensures that we are aware of, and address, the problems and needs of SMEs in the United Kingdom.

We seek to influence the European Commission's directorate-general XXIII to keep regulations to a minimum and to ensure that any assistance for SMEs is targeted where it will have most benefit, and that European assistance is provided only where it is not more appropriately provided at member state level.

US Investment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing (a) direct investment overseas and (b) inward direct investment in cash, US dollar, prices in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) Germany in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is set out in the two tables. They show figures for outward and inward foreign direct investment respectively. These figures are net figures. Therefore, inward investment in the United Kingdom is measured by adding up the following flows:

(a) foreign investment in the United Kingdom;

(b) the acquisition by a foreign company of previously United Kingdom-held shares in United Kingdom companies were:

(i) the acquisition leads to the foreign company holding more than 20 per cent. of the United Kingdom firm; or

(ii) where there is an increase of 20 per cent. or more in a foreign firm's share holdings in a United Kingdom company above that 20 per cent. figure;

(c) profit retained in the United Kingdom by foreign-owned companies;

(d) the repayment to United Kingdom companies of loans previously made to their parent/subsidiaries overseas; and

(e) cash injections from foreign companies into their United Kingdom-owned subsidiaries; and then deducting from this aggregate:

(a) sales of foreign-owned companies or shares in foreign-owned companies in the United Kingdom to United Kingdom residents above the same 20 per cent. thresholds;

(b) profits repatriated from the United Kingdom by foreign-owned companies; and

(c) the repayment by United Kingdom companies of loans made by their overseas parent/subsidiaries.

All the figures in the tables are compiled using an equivalent methodology.

The data come from national sources. Although these are the best sources available, care is needed in the interpretation of the figures. Differences in the definition of foreign direct investment used in the United Kingdom and Germany mean that the data are not strictly comparable. Furthermore, the figures are produced from the results of a sample survey, so both sets are subject to a degree of uncertainty. More recent data are also subject to quite large revisions. Finally, both sets of figures have been converted from the domestic currency into dollars, so exchange rates will have an influence on the dollar figures that emerge.

Advanced Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the expenditure in cash and standard price terms and the number of projects (a) submitted to and (b) approved by (i) the advanced technology programme and (ii) the support for innovation programme in each year since the establishment of the programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The expression "support for innovation" covered various forms of support and information in the form requested is not available.

For advanced technology programme, the information requested is shown in the table.

Steel Production

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the steel production undertaken by each EC member state for (a) the current year and (b) 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on the topic is regularly published in "Main Economic Indicators", published by the OECD, and "Eurostatistics (data for short-term analysis)", published by Eurostat, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Trade Debts

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to bring forward legislation for statutory interest on trade debts; what representations he has received from the Institute of Credit Management on the subject; and what was his response.

Mr. McLoughlin: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for small firms and consumer affairs has received a response to the Department of Trade and Industry consultation paper "Late Payment of Commercial Debt" from the Institute of Credit Management. The institute's contribution has been acknowledged and will be carefully considered with other responses.

The consultation paper sought the views of the business community on options to address late payment, including legislation for a statutory right to interest and a British standard for prompt payment. Responses to the consultation paper are currently being examined.

Postal Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account will be taken by his Department of postal services for visually impaired people within any future review of postal services in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The Post Office currently operates the articles for the blind scheme which provides for the free transmission of articles for the visually impaired. In the course of the current review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office, Ministers have assured the Royal National Institute for the Blind that under any outcome the scheme will continue as currently constituted.

Telecommunications

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will outline the process for the approval of any changes to telecommunications apparatus, indicating the role played by the British Approvals Board of Telecommunications of Oftel and his Department in making approvals.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The British Approvals Board for Telecommunications, an independent company limited by guarantee, is the approval authority, appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, for all types of telecommunications terminal equipment for connection to the public telecommunications network. BABT evaluates applications, accompanying documentation, manufacturing details and test results on the apparatus and, if it complies with the relevant standards designated by my Department of Oftel, issues a type approval. Changes to approved apparatus are subject to further testing only if that compliance is prejudiced. BABT accommodates all changes within its standard procedures so long as the supplier renews its approval. To avoid delay, BABT has made arrangements which, for the majority of changes, permit self-certification at the supplier's convenience.

My Department, with Oftel, is currently reviewing the United Kingdom approvals regime in consultation with BABT, terminal manufacturers, network operators and users.

Advice Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy towards the provision of a network of independent advice and law centres throughout the country; and what response he has made to Advice 2000 initiative launched by the Advice Services Alliance.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The provision of independent advice and law centres is a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the level of funding from his Department for voluntary advice services for the financial year 1993-94 and each of the previous 10 years; and how many schemes received funding in each year.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 April 1994]: Although the DTI does not directly fund voluntary advice services, it does fund the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, Citizens Advice Scotland and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, whose aims include the provision of advice and information by volunteers. Details for the financial years 1989-90 to 1992-93 are given in the table. The figures for 1993-94 are not yet available and the figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Financial Year	Number of schemes	Level of Funding £
1989-90	3	10,222,771
1990-91	3	11,604,172
1991-92	3	12,472,500
1992-93	3	13,303,996

Electricity Consumers Council

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the sources of funding for the Electricity Consumers Council; who appoints its members; and to whom it reports.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The Electricity Consumers Council was abolished by the Electricity Act 1989.

Gas Consumers Council

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the sources of funding for the Gas Consumers Council; who appoints its members; and to whom it reports.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The Department of Trade and Industry funds the Gas Consumers Council through its vote, although a substantial proportion of this funding is recouped from Ofgas through British Gas's authorisation fee. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is responsible for the appointment of the chairman and members of the council, which reports to the Director General and the President.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Dicks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many days the Scott inquiry has sat; how many counsel, junior counsel and solicitors are involved in the inquiry; by what method payment is assessed; what fees have been paid to each lawyer and how they were calculated; and if they were paid in respect of days on which the inquiry did not sit.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The inquiry has sat for a total of 93 days. The inquiry employs one counsel, who is paid on a daily basis, and who has been remunerated to date for 212 days' work at a daily rate of £800 plus VAT. The legal work undertaken is not confined to the oral sessions of the inquiry.

In addition, two civil servant members of the inquiry team are barristers and another one is a solicitor. All three are paid the usual civil service salary commensurate with their grade.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost to date of the Scott inquiry; and if he will list the main subheads under which these moneys were spent with the amount for each subhead.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1994]: The direct costs of the Scott inquiry to date, falling to my Department, have been £994,689. This total is broken down as follows:

Pay (for DTI Civil Servants)	£317,426
Bought-in services, including legal, security and catering services	£442,515
Legal costs incurred in advising DTI witnesses	£165,976
Other costs, including office machinery, computers, stationery, travel and subsistence	£68,772

Mr. Dicks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of what the total cost to public funds the Scott inquiry will be.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1994:] I am not at this stage able to give a reasonable estimate of the future costs of the inquiry.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of answers given to parliamentary questions over the past five years recorded in the POLIS database as including a reference to part or all of the information being available only at disproportionate cost by this Department was 76, representing some 0·5 per cent. of the total number of questions answered in the period concerned.

Information relating to which of these questions could now be answered is unavailable and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Israel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has on the consequences of the Israeli blockade on the occupied territories; and what representations he has made on this matter to the Israeli authorities in respect of its effect on the peace process;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effects of the Israeli decision to recruit foreign workers to replace Palestinians on the peace process; and what representations he has made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We, along with our European Union partners, have made known to the Israeli authorities our concern at the damaging economic and social effects of their closure of the occupied territories. The Israeli Cabinet announced on 17 April the granting of 20,000 permits for Palestinians to enter Israel, 16,000 for humanitarian purposes and 4,000 for agricultural workers, and the grant of 30 million shekels for work projects in the occupied territories.

European Commission

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British nationals are employed in the European Commission at (a) deputy-director, (b) director and (c) director-general level in DGXVII (Energy).

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no such post as deputy-director in the Commission. At director level and above in directorate-general XVII, there is one United Kingdom national—the deputy director-general.

European Court

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the United Kingdom has been taken to the European Court over the past 10 years; and what were the legal and consequential costs involved.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 18 April 1994]: Since 1 January 1985, the United Kingdom has been the defendant in 16 infraction cases brought before the court by the Commission under article 169. Details of the legal and consequential costs are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Entry Certificates

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the working of the system for the issue of entry certificates for visitors to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The system for the issue of entry clearances for visitors to the United Kingdom is constantly reviewed.

The latest list of posts overseas designated to issue entry clearances will be published shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House. In 1993, a total of 957,000 visit applications were received: 863,000, or 90 per cent. were issued, 60,000, or 6·3 per cent. were refused and 34,000, or 3·7 per cent. were deferred/referred to the Home Office. Further statistics are available in the FCO departmental report 1994.

In December 1993, Lady Anson JP DL was appointed as the first independent monitor of visit visa refusals. Her annual reports will be laid before Parliament.

North Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what are the implications for United Kingdom policy of the latest meeting between China and North Korea in Beijing, to discuss the question of North Korea's nuclear capacity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware of any recent official meeting in Peking between China and North Korea to discuss North Korea's nuclear programme.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take immediate steps with his EU counterparts, following the council meeting of 18 April and Committee of Permanent Representatives' advice, to ensure the fullest application of the Council of Ministers information code to provide citizens of the Union with fully open information on all Council legislative decision making, including items normally falling within the inter-governmental pillars.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have strongly supported moves to increase openness in the Community. The code of conduct on access to information agreed in December 1993 rightly affirms the general principle that there should be the widest possible access by the public to documents held by the Council and Commission, with certain necessary safeguards. This code complements the decisions on open council sessions and publication of votes.

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his EU colleagues about rules governing the secrecy of Council of Ministers documents including minutes of Council meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The General Affairs Council on 19 April had a brief discussion on an application from The Guardian newspaper for access to a number of Council documents, but was unable to reach a decision.

Gas Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review procedures for the reporting of deaths due to gas poisoning of United Kingdom holidaymakers abroad.

Mr. Lenox-Boyd: No. I am satisfied that our existing standard procedures for notifying next-of-kin of deaths of British nationals overseas are working properly.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to his Spanish counterparts about gas safety standards enforced in holiday apartments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. This is a matter for the Spanish authorities.

United Nations War Crimes Commission

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 484, by the Secretary of State for Defence, what further batches of information collated from interviews with refugees from Bosnia he has sent to the United Nations War Crimes Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We submitted a fourth batch of evidence, collated by the MOD's defence debriefing team, to the United Nations Commission of Experts on 7 April. This batch consisted of 10 separate reports, some of which were on regions specifically requested by the Commission.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the United Nations War Crimes Commission has asked for assistance of a military nature or type in its investigations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of one general request from the United Nations Commission of Experts for a military engineering unit to help investigate an alleged mass grave in Vukovar. The Netherlands subsequently provided such a unit.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to assisting the United Nations War Crimes Commission in the apprehension of individuals wanted by that body for questioning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Commission of Experts was established by Security Council resolution 780 to collate, analyse and investigate evidence of war crimes committed in the former Yugoslavia since 1991. It is not mandated to apprehend individuals.

Bosnian Refugees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the approximate number of Bosnian refugees who have been interviewed by the Defence debriefing team to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The MOD's defence debriefing team has interviewed approximately 5,000 individuals entering the United Kingdom from the former Yugoslavia since the conflict began. Approximately 80 per cent. of those interviewed were Bosnian, but not all were refugees.

Rwanda

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage international action for the protection of both foreign and local non-combatants in the civil war in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are active in United Nations Security Council deliberations on Rwanda and have welcomed the involvement of neighbouring countries. The first priority is to try to bring about a ceasefire, creating conditions in which it will be possible to relaunch the process of national reconciliation and set up humanitarian relief.

Malaysia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether British Airways was compensated (a) directly or (b) indirectly by public funds in order to make available landing slots at Heathrow airport to Malaysian Airlines in 1989; and whether this agreement was linked to the aid and trade arrangement or arms sales arrangement with Malaysia agreed under the revised protocol of June 1988 between the United Kingdom and Malaysia.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

On the question of compensation for British Airways, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 15 February, column 731, which made it clear that there was no compensation to British Airways either directly or indirectly from public funds. The revised air services arrangements agreed in 1989 were not linked to aid and trade provision or arms sales.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution he is making to the United Nations trust funds to assist Renamo's transformation into a political party.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 12 April, columns 23-24. The Government of Mozambique have since confirmed their agreement to our contribution of £500,000 to the United Nations trust fund for the implementation of the peace process in Mozambique and payment is being arranged.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for the Overseas Development Administration and the EU to publish a full statement on how they and non-governmental organisations are going to help rebuild the physical and social infrastructure of Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Rebuilding the infrastructure of Bosnia must depend on first implementing a peace settlement. Following an agreement reached during my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's visit to Washington, a joint United Kingdom/United States team undertook an assessment of the work needed to restore Sarajevo's essential public services. A copy of its report has already been placed in both Libraries of the House.

The EU is considering how best to assist in the restoration of services in Mostar.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British aid agencies are working in Rwanda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All British aid agencies have withdrawn from Rwanda. The following non-governmental organisations—ACORD, CARE, Christian Aid, Oxfam, and affiliated partners of Tear Fund—plan to resume operations as soon as conditions allow.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the Overseas Development Administration is making to alleviate the current unrest in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the last week we have committed some £820,000 in emergency aid, through British non-governmental organisations, for the victims of the conflict in Rwanda.

UN Sustainable Development Commission

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will be attending the meeting of the United Nations Sustainable Development Commission in New York in May.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will attend the meeting. The Department of the Environment has lead responsibilities for the United Nations Sustainable Development Commission. No decision has yet been taken on possible attendance by an FCO Minister.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what offers have been made to construct an airstrip on St. Helena free of capital cost to Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 April 1994]: A United Kingdom company, St. Helena Airways Ltd., has indicated that it would be prepared to privately fund the construction of an airstrip on St. Helena, but in return it would require financial commitments and guarantees from ODA and the St. Helena Government. I understand the St. Helena Government will be taking steps later this year to ascertain whether an air service for the island has public support and will consider the situation in the light of the outcome.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Sproat: My Department was established in April 1992. In 1992-93 DNH and its agencies employed one security firm on a contract with an annual value of £171,092. Approximately 12 guards were employed.

In 1993-94, four security firms were employed on contracts with an annual value of £520,081. Approximately 30 guards were employed.

D-day Anniversary Celebrations

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what considerations underlay the selection of Lowe Bell Communications as consultants to the D-day anniversary celebrations in preference to other firms tendering for the contract.

Mr. Sproat: Lowe Bell was selected to advise the Department of National Heritage and to help implement a high-profile programme of popular events to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the D-day landings. Of the firms which bid for this contract, Lowe Bell was considered to be best able to fulfil these requirements.

EMPLOYMENT

Working Hours

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of women in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) the United States of America work (i) full time and (ii) part time.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 April 1994]: Comparable information is not available for the United States of America. The available information is shown in the following table:

Proportion of women in full-time and part-time work in selected countries of the European Community: 1991[1]

	Percentage of women aged 16 and over in full-time work	Percentage of women aged 16 and over in part-time work
United Kingdom	27·3	21·2
Germany	28·5	14·8
France	32·3	9·9

Job Protection Legislation

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research he has recently commissioned into the employment consequences of job protection legislation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 April 1994]: Research on, or having a bearing on, this issue commissioned by the Department over the past three years includes:

"Maternity Rights in Britain" by S. McRae;
"Redundancy Payments Survey" by D. Spilsbury, A. McIntosh and J. Banerji;
"The 1992 Survey of Industrial Tribunal Applications" by N. Tremlett and N. Banerji;
"The Abolition of the Dock Labour Scheme" by N. Evans, D. MacKay, Mr. Garratt and P. Sutcliffe;
"A Review of the Economics Evidence Relating to Employment Protection Legislation" by S. M. Burgess.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the training budget for 1994-95 of each training and enterprise council; and what it was for each year since their inception, at 1994-95 prices.

Miss Widdecombe: Government offices are currently finalising contracts with training and enterprise councils for 1994-95 budgets and the information is not yet available.

The information must remain commercially confidential while TECs are negotiating with their providers, and for this reason I am not prepared to give information about individual TEC budgets for 1994-95 until after the beginning of October.

With regards to TEC budgets since their inception, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 13 December 1993, Official Report, column 512, to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter). This provides details of TEC budgets agreed with the Employment Department for the last three years in cash and real terms using prices from the first year's funding.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Advice Quality

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from the Consumers Association on the quality of advice available from local social security offices; and if he will make a statement on the action he proposes to take in response.

Mr. Hague: The quality of advice available from local social security offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Nick Raynsford, dated 20 April 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the quality of advice available from local social security offices.

You will be aware of the recent article in the Consumer Association's WHICH magazine. The article drew conclusions about standards of customer service available in Benefits Agency offices, based on a survey of their own members and on observations from a small sample of local offices. Although it cannot be said to be representative of the level of service provided by all Benefits Agency offices it is important that the comments are acknowledged.

The Benefits Agency recognises that customers expect a professional, efficient, quality service which provides prompt and accurate benefit payment. Whilst there are areas in which improvements could be made, considerable progress in this area has already been achieved. One of the major contributing factors to this improvement is our willingness to listen to customers and to respond to their comments.

For this purpose the Agency have produced two leaflets; "Let's be Fair" explains the Benefits Agency's policy on the customer's right to fair and equal treatment; "Have your say" expiains the complaints procedure to customers.

In addition, the Agency commission annually a national indpendent survey of its customers. In 1993, 3,428 customers were interviewed face to face, selected from a random postal sift of 17,000 households. The results of this survey are due to be published on 25 April 1994 and show that 84 per cent. of customers are satisfied with the standard of service provided by the Benefits Agency, against the Secretary of State's target of 85 per cent. This is an improvement on the corresponding figures for1992 when 82·3 per cent. were satisfied.

It is important, that as an Agency we are constantly aware of, and responsive to, the needs of our customers. The ongoing process of customer research helps to identify any improvements that are necessary and the areas highlighted by the WHICH article will be considered as a part of this process.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are presently employed by the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 20 April 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of staff currently employed by the Child Support Agency.

At 31 March 1994, the Agency had 5,200 staff in post in Great Britain. You may also wish to know that at the same date there were also 626 Northern Ireland civil servants based in Belfast engaged in work relating to parents with care who live in mainland Britain.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library copies of all internal bulletins relating to the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. David Blunkett, dated 20 April 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the placing of internal Child Support Agency bulletins in the Library of the House.

Operational guidance for Agency staff is contained in the Child Support Manual, copies of which are already available in the Library. Relevant internal operational bulletins are incorporated as amendments to the Manual.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance has been issued with regard to permanent maintenance orders in relation to deduction of earnings through the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what guidance he has given on the use of deduction from earnings orders in relation to interim maintenance orders through the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. David Blunkett, dated 20 April 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the guidance issued by the Child Support Agency on the implementation of deduction from earnings orders.

The imposition of a deduction from earnings order is a discretionary decision made by a Child Support Officer having considered the needs of the parent with care, and the children involved and any representations made by the absent parent. Instructions to staff in relation to deduction from earnings orders are contained in the Child Support Manual.

The Child Support (Collection of Enforcement) Regulations were amended in February specifically in relation to deduction from earnings orders on interim maintenance assessments. Detailed guidance for staff on deductions from earnings orders in such cases is in the course of preparation and will be incorporated in the Child Support Manual.

A copy of the Child Support Manual is available in the Library.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Community Care

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many community care grants were given from the Thameside office; and how many were given to refugees in each financial year from 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 20 April 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of Community Care Grants (CCG) awarded by the Benefits Agency's Thameside office and the number awarded by the Benefits Agency's Thameside office and the number awarded to refugees.

I should clarify that the Benefits Agency does not have a Thameside office but does have a Thameside District which comprises of the offices of Woolwich and Bexley. I have, therefore, provided information relating to the Thameside District as a whole.

The number of CCGs awarded in the District for each of the years 1991-92, 1993-94, which also include CCGs awarded on review, are given at Appendix A.

Information on the number of CCGs awarded to refugees in the District for the same periods is not collected as a matter of course. The information requested could only be gathered by the manual examination of all the Social Fund applications in the Thameside District and this would incur disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Appendix A
Number of Community Care Grants (CCGS) awarded in the Benefits Agency's Thameside District

Financial Year	Number of CCGs awarded
1991-92	1,613
1992-93	2,123
1993-94	2,275

Saztec Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contracts his Department have placed with Saztec Ltd. since July 1992.

Mr. Hague: None.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Hague: This Department and its executive agencies occupy over 500 sites throughout the country. Security at these sites is controlled locally and this includes the award of contracts to private companies either directly by the Department or, where appropriate, by facilities managers acting on our behalf. Information about contracts awarded is not collected centrally and therefore could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

VAT on Fuel

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have been made to pay pensioners allowances in respect of VAT on domestic fuel; and what examinations he has made of the reasons where allowances have not been paid so far.

Mr. Hague: Extra help for pensioners in respect of VAT on domestic fuel is paid automatically as part of the 1994 increase in benefit rates which is effective from week commencing 11 April 1994. The date on which the first benefit payment at the increased rate is made available will depend on the method of payment chosen by the pensioner and the day of the week on which his or her pension is payable.

Incapacity Benefit

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of how many claimants are expected to take up incapacity benefit within the Brighton borough council area from the introduction of the new benefit; and what he expects the total benefits bill to be for incapacity benefit for claimants within the Brighton borough council area in the year following the introduction of the new benefit.

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the number of people who will receive incapacity benefit, and total expenditure of the benefit, cannot reliably be broken down by local council area.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he proposes to promote the take-up of housing benefit.

Mr. Hague: Responsibility for the administration of housing benefit lies with individual local authorities which are in the best position to undertake local publicity about it. Information about housing benefit is also available at all Benefits Agency offices and unemployment benefit offices.

Latest estimates of housing benefit take-up, which are for 1990 and 1991, indicate that between 93 per cent. and 97 per cent. of available benefit is being claimed by between 90 per cent. and 95 per cent. of those eligible. Further information on take-up estimates can be found in "Income Related Benefits—Estimates of Take-up in 1990 and 1991" published on 25 March 1994, a copy of which is in the Library.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list those schools outside the maintained sector that have approached his Department, the Funding Agency for Schools or the Grant-Maintained Schools Centre with a view to acquiring grant-maintained status;

(2) how many inquiries his Department has received from independent schools seeking to become grant maintained; and how many inquiries from parents' groups, or other groups, seeking to set up new grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has received over 370 requests for information about the establishment of new grant-maintained schools by promoters. Of these, one third have been from existing independent schools and two thirds from other groups. No formal proposals have been received from promoters, and it would be inappropriate to infer, from these initial inquiries, the promoters who may formally publish proposals for new grant-maintained schools in due course.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many surplus school places there are in Wiltshire.

Mr. Forth: The estimated surplus capacity of primary schools in Wiltshire as at January 1991 is as set out in the reply to the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on 31 January 1994, Official Report, columns 517-21. The estimated number of surplus places in secondary schools at that date is 9,987, representing 23 per cent. of capacity. This corrects the figure in the previous reply. Up-to-date information on surplus capacity in all LEA areas will be collected under regulations to be made later this year.

DEFENCE

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has answered nearly 14,000 parliamentary questions over the past five years, of which less than 250, or under 2 per cent., have not been answered because of disproportionate cost or because the information requested was not held centrally. No doubt as computer and operational systems continue to improve, there will be increased potential for this percentage to decline.

Service Ranks

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ranks exist in (a) the British Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force; and what is the number of personnel in each rank.

Mr. Hanley: Ranks in the Royal Naval Services, Army and Royal Air Force, and the number of personnel in each rank as at 1 January 1994, the latest date for which information is held, were as follows:

Royal Naval Services	Numbers

Notes:

1. Figures exclude 5 star officers who remain on the active list but do not hold an appointment.
2. Commodore (RN) and Brigadier (RM) are not substantive ranks but are appointments. Figures represent Captains (RN) and Colonels (RM) filling Commodore (RN) and Brigadier (RM) appointments.
3. RGN—Registered General Nurse; EN(G)—Enrolled Nurse (General).
4. Members of Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps (QARANC) and Princess Marina's Royal Air Force Nursing Service (PMRAFNS) hold the same ranks as other personnel serving respectively in the Army and Royal Air Force.
5. RN Chaplains do not hold Service Ranks, but have been included in the Naval rank equivalent of their class.
6. The term "Officer Designate" is used to describe university cadets and personnel under initial training or awaiting initial training at one of the Service officer training establishments.
7. I would also refer the hon. Member to the Tri-Service Personnel Statistics, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House.

Sonic Booms

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations and results of investigations of reports of sonic booms over the United Kingdom since 1992.

Mr. Hanley: During the period 1 January 1992 to 31 January 1994, a total of 27 investigations of alleged sonic booms were conducted. Of these, only one incident was established as a sonic boom, 15 were identified as sonic or possible sonic events, in 10 cases the report was either withdrawn by the complainant or no sonic event established. One report is still under investigation. Details of the 17 investigations covering sonic booms/events and possible sonic events and the one outstanding case are as follows:

Date	Location	Results of investigation
1992
5 March	Off the coast of Blackpool	Sonic boom	BAe Tornado
11 March	Kings Lynn	Sonic event	F-111 aircraft suspected
18 June	Great Yarmouth	Sonic event	F4 aircraft suspected
24 November	Cambridge area	Sonic event	F15 aircraft
19-20 November	Lincoln area	Sonic events	F15 aircraft
1993
27 January	North Humberside	Sonic event	F15 aircraft suspected
2 February	Thurso	Sonic event	Tornado aircraft suspected
5 February	Scarborough	Sonic event	Tornado aircraft suspected
26 February	Bridgewater	Sonic event	Sea Harrier aircraft
8 March	Peterborough	Sonic event	F15 aircraft suspected
14 April	Peterborough	Sonic event	F15 aircraft suspected
16 July	Southwold	Sonic event	F15 aircraft
21 July	Lowestoft	Sonic event	F16 aircraft
11 August	St. Andrews	Sonic event	F15 aircraft
22 October	Morpeth	Possible sonic event	Tornado aircraft suspected
7 December	Norfolk	Still under investigation
1994
25 January	Peterborough	Sonic event	F15 aircraft suspected

Notes:

1. A sonic boom is caused by an aircraft travelling at supersonic speed.
2. A sonic event is caused when a small part of the airframe (such as the wing tips) exceeds the speed of sound. This usually occurs when an aircraft is conducting high energy manoeuvres.

Air Miss

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his response to the recommendations of the joint air miss working group report on the air miss between a Boeing 737 and three United States air force F–16s on 26 May 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The recommendations are currently being addressed by national air traffic services in conjunction with the appropriate staffs in MOD.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what briefing the pilots of the United States Air Force F–16 aircraft involved in an air miss with a British Midland Airways Boeing 737 on 26 May 1993 had received on United Kingdom airspace and air traffic control procedures (a) from British military personnel or (b) from United States air force personnel prior to their flight.

Mr. Hanley: The F-16 aircraft, operating from their base at Spangdahlen in Germany, were participating in a joint Royal Air Force/United States air force exercise in the United Kingdom. The aircrew received a full briefing on all aspects of the United Kingdom airspace control procedures from United States air force (Europe) personnel. The USAF aircraft are required to adhere to the same flying regulations as those of the RAF.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which airfield the United States air force F–16s involved in an air miss over Midlothian on 26 May 1993 took off for the sortie; and where they landed on completion of the sortie.

Mr. Hanley: The aircraft took off from their home base at Spangdahlen, Germany and returned to the same base at the end of the sortie.

Atomic Testing

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the report of the National Radiological Protection Board regarding atomic testing.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox), on 9 December 1993, Official Report, columns 360-62.

Low Flying

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what implications the cancellation of tactical air-to-surface missiles have for the need to conduct low flying exercises.

Mr. Hanley: None.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been claimed in total in compensation to farmers in Wales for loss of livestock, abortion and loss of production caused by low-flying aircraft; how much of this total is of disputed claims; how much has been settled; and how much remains to be settled for each year since 1980.

Mr. Hanley: There can be no meaningful total of amounts initially claimed, because many claims are unquantified at the outset and may be repudiated without valuation. Settlement is reached after a process of valuation, usually on independent advice, and in consultation with the claimant. Reliable data on settlements are available only from 1988 onwards and since then the Ministry of Defence has paid the following amounts of compensation to farmers in Wales for livestock losses which have been attributed to low flying military aircraft activity:

1988	30,228
1989	31,584
1990	47,953
1991	59,160
1992	33,153

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement summarising the results of ground-level noise measurements for aircraft involved in low flying sorties; and what changes there have been in the amount of noise nuisance since 1980.

Mr. Hanley: A series of trials, known as Exercise Luce Belle, to measure noise on the ground arising from military aircraft flying at low level has taken place at RAE West Freugh since 1990. The results of these trials have shown that at the speeds and heights normally flown in the United Kingdom low flying system no aircraft type generates a noise level on the ground in excess of 125 dB(A), a level at which research has indicated there is no significant risk to human hearing. A copy of the report on the first trial, which covered the main aircraft types, is available in the Library of the House. As my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Mr. Carlisle) announced to the House on 14 October 1991, Official Report, column 115, we aim to have reduced the amount of low flying by jet aircraft in the United Kingdom by around 30 per cent. by the end of this year.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the mean (a) height above the ground and (b) velocity for aircraft during low flying sorties, and what change there has been in these figures since 1980.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average length of time from initial receipt of a claim to its payment by his Department in processing claims for compensation to farmers in the United Kingdom for loss of livestock, abortion and loss of production caused by low-flying aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: The time from claim to payment can vary greatly and as the data required to calculate an average length of time is not readily available, the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alan W. Williams : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid out in compensation to farmers in the United Kingdom for loss of livestock, abortions and loss of production caused by low-flying aircraft during each year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: Reliable data are available only from 1988 onwards. Since then the Ministry of Defence has paid out the following amounts in compensation to farmers in Great Britain—United Kingdom excluding Northern Ireland—for livestock losses caused by low flying military aircraft:

1988	273,934
1989	160,039
1990	254,683
1991	293,301
1992	230,312
1993	299,503

Public Record Office

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to ensure that additional staff resources are provided to clear any backlog of claims for disability pensions owing to restricted access to the Public Record Office archive at Hayes.

Mr. Hanley: In addition to the normal, full, staffing levels, a futher nine full-time staff are currently employed on casual contracts and will remain so while a backlog of claims exist. In addition, overtime is being worked seven days a week.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there will be unrestricted access to the Public Record Office archive at Hayes to enable the backlog of claims for disability pensions to be progressed.

Mr. Hanley: There has been unrestricted access to the Public Record Office archive at Hayes since the end of February.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims for disability pensions have been delayed as a result of the asbestos contamination at the Public Record Office archive at Hayes; how many of these claims have been outstanding for more than (a) six months, (b) 12 months and (c) 24 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The amount of war pension claims delayed as a result of the recent closure of the archives at Hayes numbered approximately 30,000 in total.

Apart from a small number of individual cases of particular complexity which could be separately identified only at disproportionate cost, the archives' backlogs are now rather less than six months and already as little as two months in some areas.

Defence Debriefing Team

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are currently assigned to the defence debriefing team; what consideration he has given to incresing the size of the defence debriefing team; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently some 40 individuals serving with the defence debriefing team, all of whom are military personnel. This is considered sufficient to meet the team's present task and there are no plans to increase its size, although that position is kept under review. During the course of its work the team has acquired information on alleged human rights violations and war crimes committed in Bosnia. This information has been passed to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for onward transmission to the United Nations commission of experts.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Importation (Slaughter)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep and other animals are being imported annually for slaughter; from where; and to which destinations.

Mr. Soames: Data on the imports of live sheep for slaughter are not available separately from the total of all live sheep imports. For other animal types, data on live imports for slaughter are only separately available from the total of live imports for bovines and horses.

It is not possible to state the destination for the animals once they have been imported into the United Kingdom.

The table gives the total number of live imports by animal type for 1992, the latest year for which annual data are available. In addition, the second column gives the number of imports of live bovines for slaughter and the seventh column gives the number of imports of live horses for slaughter.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many parliamentary questions to her Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if she will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Jack: The POLIS database lists 85 parliamentary questions as not having been answered between January 1989 and December 1993 on the grounds of disproportionate cost or because the information was not held centrally. Details of each of these questions can be obtained from the POLIS database, access to which is available in the Library.

Information relating to questions which could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Farm Statistics

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average size for (a) each English county and (b) each farm business survey county group of all (i) severely disadvantaged area, (ii) disadvantaged area and (iii) less-favoured area farms and for (1) SDA, (2) DA and (3) less-favoured areas farms larger than eight ESUs—European size units.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 20 April 1994]: Estimates of the average sizes of main holdings are obtained from the annual June agricultural census. The average size in 1992 of all main holdings which are wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas and those greater than eight ESUs is given in the table.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received in 1994 from North Devon about the future of milk marketing.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend and her Department have received a small number of letters about the Milk Marketing Board's reorganisation proposals from, or on behalf of, individuals and organisations in North Devon.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated gross income and net income likely to be generated by each executive agency for which her Department is responsible for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Jack: The agencies for which my Department is responsible are required to recover the full costs of their activities each year. None is permitted to make a surplus. Gross income in 1994-95 is expected to be:

	£ million
ADAS	85·3
Central Science Laboratory	26·3
Central Veterinary Laboratory	26·2
Pesticides Safety Directorate	12·8
Veterinary Medicines Directorate	8·1

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will give the date on which such executive agency for which her Department has responsibility was set up and its terms of reference.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry has responsibility for five executive agencies which were established as follows:

ADAS—launched 1 April 1992
Central Science Laboratory—launched 1 April 1992
Central Veterinary Laboratory—launched 2 April 1990
Pesticides Safety Directorate—launched 1 April 1993
Veterinary Medicines Directorate—launched 2 April 1990

With effect from 1 April 1994, the Central Science Laboratory was merged with the food science laboratories at Norwich and Torry to form an enlarged Central Science Laboratory.

The terms of reference for each of the above are set out in their respective framework documents, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether she will itemise the estimated net cost or net profit likely to be generated for the financial year 1994-95 in each executive agency for which her Department is responsible.

Mr. Jack: My Department is a major customer of each of the agencies in question. They are required to recover the full costs of the services they provide; in respect of ADAS this is after taking account of all funding, including departmental contributions to certain charged advisory services.

Rabies

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent the recent changes in the arrangements to prevent the return of rabies to these islands present a risk of such a return.

Mr. Soames: The new procedures for importing certain commercially traded rabies susceptible animals, mainly rodents, into this country from other member states of the European Union, with effect from 1 January 1994, and traded dogs and cats with effect from 1 July 1994, do not increase the risk of importing rabies into the United Kingdom.

Chocolate

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests of chocolate manufactured in the United Kingdom for pesticide residues are (a) currently being undertaken and (b) planned by her Department.

Mr. Soames: The Government's working party on pesticide residues will be carrying out a survey of samples of milk, plain and white chocolate later this year. Samples will be analysed for residues of a range of organochlorine and organophoshorus pesticides and the results are expected to be published in 1995 in the working party's annual report for 1994. Future work will depend on the results obtained from the current survey.

Sunken Barge, South Devon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will ensure the removal of the barge that was sunk at Hall Sands off the south Devon coast before the tourist season starts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: This Department has no powers to do so. I shall be writing to the hon. Member.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Driving Offences

Mr. Miller: To ask the Attorney-General (1) how many drivers, prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service on a principal charge under section 1 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 causing death by dangerous driving, have pleaded guilty;

(2) how many drivers prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of causing death by dangerous driving were (a) convicted and (b) acquitted by a Crown court jury;

(3) how many drivers have been prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service on a principal charge of careless driving or driving without due care and attention since (a) 1985 and (b) the introduction of the Road Traffic Act 1991;

(4) how many drivers were prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of causing death by reckless driving (a) in each year between 1985 and the introduction of the Road Traffic Act 1991 and (b) in total;

(5) how many prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of section 3A of the Road Trafic Act 1991, of causing death by careless driving under the influence of drink or drugs have been discontinued or have failed (a) as a consequence of breath or blood tests being deemed inadmissible or of questionable veracity and (b) for other reasons;

(6) how many drivers have been prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service on a principal charge of manslaughter since (a) 1985 and (b) since the introduction of the Road Traffic Act 1991;

(7) how many prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge under section 1 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 causing death by dangerous driving were discontinued; and for what reasons;

(8) how many prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of causing death by reckless driving between 1985 and the introduction of the Road Traffic Act 1991 were discontinued, or left on file because the accused pleaded guilty to a lesser summary motoring offence;

(9) how many drivers prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service on a principal charge under section 1 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 causing death by dangerous driving have (a) been convicted by a Crown court jury and (b) been acquitted by a Crown courty jury;

(10) how many prosecutions have been brought by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge under section 3(A) of the Road Traffic Act 1991, causing death by careless driving under the influence of drink or drugs (a) in each year since the Act came into operation and (b) in total;

(11) how many drivers have been prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge under section 1 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 causing death by dangerous driving in each year since the Act came into force;

(12) in how many cases since (a) 1985 and (b) the coming into force of the Road Traffic Act 1991, a death has been caused by a driver prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of driving without due care and attention;

(13) how many prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service on a principal charge of causing death by reckless driving between 1985 and the introduction of the Road Traffic Act 1991 were discontinued; and for what reasons;

(14) how many prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of section 3(A) of the Road Traffic Act 1991, causing death by careless driving under the influence of drink or drugs resulted in successful convictions;

(15) how many drivers prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge of causing death by reckless driving between 1985 and the introduction of the Road Traffic Act 1991 pleaded guilty;

(16) how many private prosecutions for (a) manslaughter and (b) causing death by dangerous driving have been taken over by the Crown Prosecution Service and (i) discontinued or (ii) prosecuted successfully;

(17) how many prosecutions brought by the Crown Prosecution Service under a principal charge under section 1 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 of causing death by dangerous driving were discontinued, or left on file because the accused pleaded guilty to a lesser summary motoring offence.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service does not maintain central records of proceedings in respect of specific offences. The information is recorded on individual case files, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dropped Cases

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Crown Prosecution Service has completed its internal investigation into the reasons for the proportion of cases submitted to it which are dropped; when he intends to publish a report on the investigation's findings; and what action he intends to take in the light of the investigation's findings.

The Attorney-General: The findings of the survey of cases discontinued by the Crown Prosecution Service during November 1993 was placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament on 26 January 1994. The issues are being addressed by the CPS in a number of ways in particular by steps to improve liaison between the police and the CPS including the development of agreed charging standards so that the occasions on which it is necessary to vary charges are kept to a minimum. It is already the policy of the CPS to consult the police in relation to significant variations of charges.

Fraud

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to publish the report of his review team on the work of the Serious Fraud Office and its relationship with the fraud group of the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The report and the question of publication are both under consideration at present.

Racially Motivated Offences

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what action he is planning to take in the light of his meeting with the all-party parliamentary group on race and community on Thursday 3 February, on the subject of the Crown Prosecution Service's attitude to racially motivated offences.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service's approach to racially motivated offences is set out in the code for Crown prosecutors. When assessing whether a prosecution is required in the public interest, a clear racial motivation is regarded as an aggravating feature pointing towards prosecution if there is sufficient evidence to provide a realistic prospect of a conviction.

The CPS is considering the introduction of race awareness training nationally. In London the National Association of Care and Resettlement Officers has been consulted about providing such training. The CPS is also carefully considering systems to monitor the implementation of its policies which are designed to ensure that defendants of all ethnic origins are treated equally.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to (a) privatise or (b) make into a "next steps" agency, the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: I announced on 6 December 1993, Official Report, column 60, that consideration was to be given to whether the Serious Fraud Office, and two other of my Departments, should become agencies under the "next steps" programme. My decision will be reached in the light of the relevant study of whether agency status is appropriate and this study will, as is usual, cover the question of the extent to which the work in question should be performed in the public sector. A decision that the Serious Fraud Office should become an agency would not involve any change in my superintendence of the office or my accountability for it.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Braille Ballot Papers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to provide Braille ballot papers at polling stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The problems faced by voters with visual disabilities have been discussed during the course of the post-election review established by the Secretaries of State for the Home Departments, but there are currently no plans to introduce legislation to provide Braille ballot papers at polling stations.

Community Care

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from organisations in the voluntary sector in Northern Ireland concerning the new community care arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: LEAD, a coalition of voluntary organisations involved with mentally handicapped people in Northern Ireland, wrote to my noble Friend Baroness Denton on 28 March 1994 about its concerns in relation to the implementation of the new community care arrangements. Officials from the Department of Health and Social Services are due to meet LEAD on 20 May 1994 to discuss these concerns.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if community care trusts in Northern Ireland will be obliged to set aside a predetermined and fixed proportion of their overall funding for care of the elderly in private establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: It is for health and social services boards to determine the community services they will purchase for elderly people from a range of providers, including health and social services trusts, and the private and voluntary sectors. The Department of Health and Social Services does not require boards to spend a fixed proportion of their "People First" community care funds on services provided by the private sector. However, boards are expected to make full use of the private sector whenever it is appropriate and cost effective to do so.

New Household Formation

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the rate of new household formation has been in 1991, 1992 and 1993; what the projected rate is to the end of 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: Information is not available for 1991 and 1994. Estimates are available for the years 1992 and 1993 and are shown in the table.

Rate of new household formation

1992	1·9 per cent. (9,929 new households)
1993	2·4 per cent. (12,894 new households)

Electricity Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in the last year he has met the Director General of Electricity Supply and those involved in the electricity industry; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Tim Smith: My right hon. and learned Friend met the Director General of Electricity Supply informally in June 1993 and in July 1993 visited Kilroot power station where he was briefed on the operation of the plant. Officials from the Department of Economic Development meet the Director General regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what records and research findings are held within his Department of the numbers of homeless people who are registered on electoral registers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: No such records are held.

HOME DEPARTMENT

DNA Testing

13. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the police regarding DNA sampling.

Mr. Howard: The police have warmly welcomed my proposals to allow DNA samples to be taken in all recordable offences.

Witness Intimidation

14. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to protect witnesses from intimidation.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Justice Bill contains a new offence of witness intimidation. This will make it easier to prosecute anyone who seeks to intimidate or take revenge on witnesses, jurors or any person assisting the police.

Body Armour

15. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that police authorities make body armour available for all police officers who request it.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Decisions about issuing protecting equipment are for chief officers of police.

Animal Experimentation

17. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals destroyed were as a result of, or after the conclusion of, scientific experiment or testing in (i) 1983 and in (ii) 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Statistics on the number of animals destroyed as a result of, or after the conclusion of, scientific experiment or testing, are not currently collected.

Crack

18. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of possession of the drug crack are known to the Metropolitan police in 1994; and what further action he plans to deal with this.

Mr. Maclean: Provisional figures which have been supplied by the Metropolitan police for January and February this year show that there were 88 seizures of crack. I understand, though, that as an agreed Metropolitan police force strategy all area drug squads give priority to tackling crack dealing.

Young Offenders

19. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish details of the proposed secure training centres for young offenders.

Mr. Maclean: Notifications to those companies invited to tender for the design, build, operate, maintain and finance contracts for five secure training centres will be issued this month. I am able to announce today the locations of four of these:

Campsfield House (Oxfordshire)
Gringley (Nottinghamshire)
Medomsley (Durham)
Onley (Warwickshire)

A decision on the fifth site from which a secure training centre will serve London and the south-east will be announced as soon as possible.

Security Firms

21. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held into the posssibility of local police authorities setting up separate security firms to run in competition with private security firms currently operating.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions.

Drug Dealers

22. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek a change in the law to increase custodial sentences for criminals convicted of selling drugs to young people in the proximity of schools.

Mr. Maclean: The maximum sentence under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 for those convicted of supplying controlled drugs in class A—for example, heroin and ecstasy—class B—for example, cannabis and amphetamines—and class C—for example, the benzodiazepine tranquillisers—are life imprisonment, 14 years and five years respectively. The Government have no plans to increase those penalties.

Prison Interviews

23. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the arrangements by which convicted prisoners give interviews while in prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prison Service standing order 5A 37 states that visits to inmates by journalists or authors in their professionnal capacity should in general not be allowed. My right hon. and learned Friend has no intention of changing these arrangements.

Uniformed Police, London

24. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for increasing the numbers of uniformed police officers in London.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Extra resources made available for the civilianisation of non-operational posts currently filled by police officers will enable 400 officers to be released for operational duties in 1994-95. In addition my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has approved the Commissioner's plan to restructure the Metropolitan police and this is expected to release more resources for operational tasks.

Neighbourhood Watch

25. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet representatives of neighbourhood watch schemes in rural areas.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and I, with other ministerial colleagues in the Home Office, regularly meet members of neighbourhood watch schemes during our frequent visits to rural areas. In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend will be attending the first national rural crime prevention conference on 13 June and the national neighbourhood watch conference planned for 5 November, both of which will provide an opportunity for him to meet and consider the views of neighbourhood watch members from all parts of the country.

Prison Disciplinary Regime

26. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to improve the disciplinary regime in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Sanctions against misbehaviour by prisoners have recently been reviewed. My right hon. and learned Friend has increased the maximum periods of cellular confinement that may be awarded by governors for breaches of prison rule 47. He is also tightening the arrangements under which prisoners may have additional days punishment cancelled automatically as a reward for subsequent good behaviour.

Judicious use of incentives to good behaviour also plays an important part in maintaining discipline. Work is in hand to see how the application of incentives can be improved.

Secure Training Orders

27. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what importance he attaches to the maximum secure training order lasting two years; and what assessment he has made of the effect of reducing this maximum to 12 months or 24 months in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Maclean: We believe that a two-year maximum is necessary so that courts can sentence appropriately youngsters whose persistent offending is most serious and whose need for custodial training is greatest. Twelve months would allow the courts insufficient flexibility to reflect in their sentencing the gravity of the offending. Criteria designed to identify the exceptional circumstances in which a 24-month sentence would be appropriate would, we believe, introduce unnecessary complications, fetter sentencers' discretion and increase the likelihood of appeals.

Chief Constables

28. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning his policies as they affect the appointment of chief constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend's responsibilities under section 4(2) and other sections of the Police Act 1964 are exercised with a view to promoting the efficiency of the police. An important consideration in deciding upon an officer's suitability for appointment as chief constable is his or her breadth of experience as a senior manager, including service in another force. Guidance to police authorities on this aspect of eligibility for appointment as a chief constable is contained in Home Office circular 76 of 1976, a copy of which may be obtained from the Library.

Police Radio Communications

29. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress police forces have made with secure radio communications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A speech privacy facility—the GEC-Marconi MASC—has been approved by the Association of Chief Police Officers and by the Home Office and 25 police forces have now purchased MASC equipment. Secure radios with a high level of encryption are also available for specialised operations.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effects of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 on refusal rates for asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Implementation of the Act is being carefully monitored. The proportion of outright refusals of asylum applications has increased significantly since last July when the Act came into force. This is attributable not to the Act itself but to the accompanying change limiting the use of exceptional leave to cases where there are genuine humanitarian reasons for not enforcing removal.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of fines which have been levied against carriers under section 1 of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 in each year since its commencement; how much has been waived in each year since the commencement of the Act; and how much is now outstanding.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is as follows:

£ million

Year	Total charges levied	Total charges waived
1987	3·92	0·15
1988	4·40	0·12
1989	7·86	0·34
1990	9·63	0·71
[1]1991	12·89	1·52
1992	12·72	1·60
1993	11·04	3·31

[1] The charge to the carrier for each improperly documented passenger was increased from £1,000 to £2,000 on 1 August 1991.

The total amount now outstanding is £20·76 million.

Fine Defaulters

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fine defaulters held in gaols in England and Wales were received into custody for (a) non-payment of television licence, (b) non-payment of poll or community tax, (c) non-payment of fine in respect of soliciting or loitering and (d) other reasons at the latest date available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 21 April 1994:

Fine Defaulters

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many fine defaulters held in jails in England and Wales were received into custody for (a) non-payment of television licence, (b) non-payment of poll or community tax, (c) non-payment of fine in respect of soliciting or loitering and (d) other reasons at the latest date available.

The available information which is provisional for receptions of fine defaulters into Prison Service establishments in 1993 is given in the attached table. The available information for non-payment of the community charge, which is classed as a non-criminal offence and not a fine default, is for 1992: it shows that 504 persons (a provisional total) were received into a Prison Service establishment for the offence.

I regret to inform you that we are unable to provide information relating to loitering as it is not a separately coded offence.

Receptions of fine defaulters into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, 1993[1]

Offence	Number
Using a TV without a licence	845
Soliciting	7
Other	21,731
All receptions	22,583

[1] Provisional figures.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were gaoled in England and Wales for fine default in each year since 1982.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 21 April 1994:

Fine Defaulters

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many people were jailed in England and Wales for fine default in each year since 1982.

Information on receptions of fine defaulters into Prison Service establishments for the period 1981 to 1991 is published in table 7.1 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1991", Cm. 2157, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons library. Provisional information for 1992 and 1993 gives the number of receptions of fine defaulters as 19,826 and 22,583 respectively.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest date available, how many fine defaulters in gaols in England and Wales were (a) male and (b) female.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dick Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones dated 21 April 1994:

Fine Defaulters

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, for the latest date available, how many fine defaulters in jails in England and Wales were (a) male and (b) female.

On 28 February 1994 there were 481 fine defaulters—455 males and 26 females—in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily population of fine defaulters in gaols in England and Wales for the latest year available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dick Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones dated 21 April 1994:

Fine Defaulters

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average daily population of fine defaulters in jails in England and Wales for the latest year available.

The latest information is for 1993. The average population of fine defaulters in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales was 492 persons in 1993.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fine defaulters in gaols in England and Wales were serving (a) seven days or less, (b) eight to 14 days, (c) 15 to 21 days, (d) 22 to 28 days and (e) over 28 days at the latest date available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 21 April 1994:

Fine Defaulters

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many fine defaulters in jails in England and Wales were serving (a) seven days or less, (b) eight to 14 days, (c) 15 to 21 days, (d) 22 to 28 days and (e) over 28 days at the latest date available.

A breakdown of the population of fine defaulters on 30 September 1993 by the sentence lengths requested is given in the attached table.

Population of fine defaulters in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales by period imposed in default, 30 September 1993[1]

Period imposed in default	Number of persons
0 to 7 days	88
8 to 14 days	130
15 to 21 days	57
22 to 28 days	113
Over 28 days	237
All persons	625

[1]Provisional figures.

Special Constabulary

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of employment are excluded from membership of the special constabulary.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The guidelines on categories of employment are currently under review. I will write to my hon. Friend.

Parish Constables

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many permanent establishment parish constables have been appointed as a direct result of his initiative on parish constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Parish constables are being recruited as special constables or as parish wardens. They are volunteers and are not included as part of permanent police establishments.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the practical successes that have come from his initiative for parish constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It would be premature to seek to judge the success of the schemes at this stage, although we are pleased with the response to the initiative so far. Officials from the Home Office research and planning unit are collecting information about the progress of schemes, and are closely monitoring the progress of four selected pilots, with a view to publishing a report evaluating the schemes towards the end of the year.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sources of funding are available to fund the provision of parish constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Parish special constable schemes are funded in the same way any other policing activities, although a limited amount of capital grant—some £21,000—has been provided by the Home Office for the supply of essential communications equipment. In some schemes, the local community has sponsored such communications equipment. A number of communities have provided office space free of charge for the use of their parish special constable.

The sources of funding for parish warden schemes vary. Three schemes are funded by their local police, with communications equipment provided by local sponsors. Three schemes have been funded through the county council. Five neighbourhood watch wardens, a variation on the recommended warden model, are funded by the parish council of Glenfield, in Leicestershire.

Squatting

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding squatting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office issued a consultation paper on this subject in 1991, to which we received 216 responses. My hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) gave a general account of these on 17 June 1992 in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford), at column 522.

Since then, we have received a number of further representations from hon. Members and others. The Government's proposals for changing the criminal law as it relates to squatting are contained in part V of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill now before Parliament.

Refugees

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many political refugees from Turkey there were in Britain at the latest date; and how many there have been in each of the last four years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is that, in the period 1 January 1979 to 31 March 1994, around 2,600 Turkish nationals, including associated dependants, were recognised as refugees and granted asylum in the United Kingdom. Information on the number of these cases who have since died, left the country, obtained British citizenship or otherwise ceased to hold refugee status here, and information before 1979, is not available.

Information on the number granted asylum in each of the years 1990 to 1993 is given in the table.

Turkish nationals[1] recognised as refugees and granted asylum, including associated dependants[2], 1990 to 1993

Year	Number
1990	580
1991	160
1992	800
1993	520

[1] Estimated figures, rounded to the nearest 10.
[2] Includes dependants who applied with the principal applicant or who arrived subsequently before the grant of asylum to the principal. Figures exclude dependants who arrived after the principal grant.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records and research findings are held within his Department of the number of homeless people who are registered on electoral registers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. Homeless people are not identified in the electoral register and no research has been undertaken on behalf of the Home Office into the number registered.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the amount of money to be withheld from United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. under the tems of the management contract to manage Blakenhurst prison, in the light of the incident on 24 February, to have been settled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 21 April 1994:

HM Prison Blakenhurst

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Blakenhurst prison.

The matter has now been settled; the intended financial remedy has been taken.

Electronic Mail

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the use of private encryption technology by individuals or companies to protect data sent by electronic mail.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

It is a matter for the individual, or company, to take measures, which may include private encryption technology, which they consider necessary to safeguard their electronic mail communication.

WALES

Computer Systems

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what computer systems his Department has brought in, for what function and at what cost for each of the last five years; and in each case whether the computer system is still in use.

Mr. Redwood: Full details could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, information relating to certain larger systems acquired during the past five years, all of which are still in use, is detailed in the table:

System type and function	Cost £
SYSTEMS PURCHASED TO SUPPORT ADMINISTRATIVE FUNCTIONS
PC Network Statistical Systems (installation period 1989-94)	193,600
PC Network Support for Ministerial Offices (installation period 1989-94)	112,400
PC Network Office Automation, Grant applications, Financial Monitoring (installation period 1990-94)	79,000
PC Network Office Automation, Typing Services, Records Management, Press and Publicity (installation period 1990-94)	274,000
PC Network Housing Subsidy and Grants (installation period 1992-93)	48,000
SYSTEMS PURCHASED AS A RESULT OF LEGISLATIVE OR ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES
Mini Computer To assist the administration of Agricultural support in Wales (installation May 1993. Life span estimated to be seven years)	874,680
Mini Computer Personal Systems (installation May 1990. Life span estimated to be seven years)	62,180

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Redwood: The number of parliamentary questions that have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the past five years such as can easily be provided by POLIS is 523. Information concerning how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wales Cancer Registry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish the statistics of the Wales Cancer Registry for the years 1988 to 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Cancer registration data from the Wales Cancer Registry for 1988 have been published in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales, No. 19, 1992", available in the Library of the House. Data for 1989 will be published in the next edition at the end of April. More detailed information relating to the period 1984-89 will be made available in a report from the Wales Cancer Registry, "Cancer Registration in Wales, 1984-89", due to be published during the summer of 1994.

Cancer registration is complex, relying in the main on data submitted by hospitals, regional cancer registries in England and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. New information on patients may be received some time after the actual incidence of cancer. Extensive validation is required in order, for example, to eliminate duplicates. The policy of the Wales Cancer Registry is to make available and publish data for a particular year when it is believed that future revisions will be small.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information is made available to his Department on the ways in which the content of toxic waste imported into Wales can be verified against consignment notes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is the responsibility of the competent authority—district council—to ensure that the waste matches the description of the consignment note in accordance with advice given in Welsh Office circular 25/89.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the companies of origin of the toxic and hazardous waste imported into Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Ombudsman

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints concerning his Department's work have been brought to his attention in each year since 1979 by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration; what steps he or his predecessors have taken to deal with complaints forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement on his Department's relationship with the ombudsman.

Mr. Redwood: Complaints concerning the Welsh Office are noted, where applicable, in the reports of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration which have been published every year since 1967. Copies of these reports are held in the Library of the House. My Department takes all necessary steps in dealing with complaints.

Glanders

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of cases of glanders and farcy in each year since 1985.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Redwood: During the past 10 years my Department has regularly employed two private security firms under contracts valued as follows:

Year	£000s
1984-85	73
1985-86	85
1986-87	88
1987-88	89
1988-89	92
1989-90	99
1990-91	105
1991-92	115
1992-93	119
1993-94	133

I estimate that 10 guards were needed in each of the years from 1984-85 to 1990-91 and 9 from 1991-92 to 1993-94.

During the 1991-92 financial year, Cadw Welsh Historic Monuments, an executive agency within my Department made use of a private security firm for a special event at a cost of £9,000. The number of security employees involved is not known.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the level of contaminated land on areas controlled by Railtrack in Wales; what discussions he has had with the chairman of Railtrack over the clean-up of contaminated land associated with railway operations in Wales; and what resources he has committed to the clean-up of contaminated land in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A survey of contaminated land in Wales, including railway land, was undertaken on behalf of the Welsh Office and Welsh Development Agency in 1987-88. Its findings were published and a copy of the report is in the Library of the House.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales, has had no discussions to date with the chairman of Railtrack on this issue but, as is the case with other landowners, the company would normally be responsible for dealing with any dangerous contamination identified on its land.

In terms of resources, the Welsh Development Agency estimates that some £7 million of its land reclamation budget in 1994-95 will be devoted to dealing with contaminated land. Further resources will also be allocated through the strategic development scheme.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount given to the non-state schools in Wales under the assisted places scheme since its inception; what was the cash total in each recipient school since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 18 April 1994]: The assisted places scheme has proved popular in Wales. Almost all available places have been taken up and more than a third of parents pay no fees. The information requested is as follows:

Housing Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each district council area in Wales and for Wales as a whole his Department's estimate of (a) the number of people claiming housing benefit, (b) the number of people entitled to housing benefit who are not currently entering a claim and (c) (b) as a percentage of the total number entitled to claim housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the estimated number of recipients of housing benefit is published in table 9.6 of "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 13, 1993", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. There are no estimates at local authority or Welsh level of the number of people entitled to housing benefit. However, estimates of housing benefit take-up in Great Britain are included in the Department of Social Security's publication "Income Related Benefits: Estimates of Take-Up in 1990 and 1991" which is also available in the Library of the House.

Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will set out the conclusions of the review of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Mr. Redwood: I intend to give hospitals greater choice in obtaining their support services. More money will be released for direct patient care enabling a better standard of service to be provided.

The authority carries out a number of non-core NHS activities throughout Wales including estates, information technology, procurement, prescription pricing and personnel services. It also undertakes a number of additional functions for the Welsh Office.

Now that most hospital services are provided by trusts, the authority need no longer be the major provider of support services. Hospitals will be able to choose between WHCSA and others, and some functions of WHCSA will be privatised.

The authority has management responsibilities for three clinical services: the artificial limb and appliance services, "Breast Test Wales" and the national blood transfusion service. These will be reviewed separately.

SCOTLAND

Lambs

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 179, what were the estimated lamb losses attributed to fox predation for each of the past six years.

Sir Hector Monro: Information on which to base estimates of numbers of lambs lost or of losses prevented is not collected centrally.

Access to the Countryside

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Ramblers Association to discuss rights of public access to the countryside; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet representatives of the Ramblers Association. On my right hon. Friend's behalf, I recently met representatives of the voluntary environmental sector, including the new chairman of Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link, of which the Ramblers Association are members. The issue of public access to the countryside was raised at that meeting.

Asthma

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of asthma were reported in each Scottish health region for each year since 1979; and if he will set out the figures in the same manner as the Secretary of State for Health in her answer to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) of 30 March, Official Report, columns 887-90.

Mr. Stewart: Information on the numbers of discharges, by health board of treatment, with a principal diagnosis of asthma is shown in the table for calendar years 1979-1992.

In-patient and day case discharges, including deaths, with a principal diagnosis of asthma by health board of treatment 1979 to 1992

Police Complaints

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish an independent body to investigate and take action on complaints against police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to establish such a body. The Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill includes a new power for Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary to review how a complaint has been handled by the police and, in certain circumstances, to direct the chief constable to reconsider the complaint.

Gaming Regulations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regulations govern the promotion of (a) raffles, (b) pools and (c) totes in relation to (i) registration, (ii) operation, (iii) percentage payouts, (iv) distribution of funds and (v) administration costs; which regulations specifically limit their use by political parties during and outwith election campaigns; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The operation of raffles or lotteries is regulated by the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976. Pool betting and totes are governed by the terms of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963. Provided that a lottery, pools or tote scheme is promoted in accordance with the relevant statutory provisions, there are no regulations which specifically restrict their use by political parties.

Clinical Waste Incinerators

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the location and owner or operator of each clinical waste incinerator in the Argyll and Clyde health board area; whether these clinical waste incinerators comply fully with current pollution control legislation; whether they are likely to comply with any known new standards; when the most recent report on the operation of these incinerators were submitted to him; and what action he has found it necessary to take.

Mr. Stewart: The NHS in the Argyll and Clyde health board area owns and operates clinical waste incinerators at the Royal Alexandra hospital and Inverclyde Royal hospital. The plant at both hospitals meets current statutory requirements but will not comply with the statutes which come into force in October 1995.

Whilst there have been operational difficulties from time to time with the incinerators, I understand that currently the equipment is performing to specification.

A small amount of clinical waste is also burned at the Linwood municipal incinerator installation mainly as a back-up to the local NHS incinerators. This plant meets the present statutory requirements and is, I understand, scheduled to be closed by the end of this year.

Public Appointments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the name, address and occupation and/or former occupation of each justice of the peace in Renfrew district; which wards are under-represented as a proportion of the total; when he next plans to make additional appointments; what criteria he will apply in making these appointments; what are the procedures for making nominations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As for other commission areas in Scotland, my right hon. Friend is advised on the need for new appointments as justices of the peace for the commission area of Renfrew by the advisory committee on justices of the peace for that area, which also advises him on the personal suitability of candidates. Recommendations for consideration by the advisory committee may be made on a form obtainable from the Secretary to the advisory committee. The criteria for appointment are, first, that candidates should be personally suitable in character, integrity and understanding; and, second only to this, that the area of selection is wide so that justices are broadly representative of all sections of the community which they serve. Advisory committees are required to have regard to the availability of justices to members of the public and to the requirements of the district court duty rota.

I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible about the detailed information which he has requested.

Raymond Gilmour

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current position in his consideration of the application for the prerogative of mercy by Raymond Gilmour; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend wrote to the hon. Member on 18 April this year, informing him of his decision to reject the petition submitted on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Raymond Gilmour.

Police Complaints

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what channels exist for police officers to vindicate themselves following false accusations being brought against them; if it is open to all ranks of officer to pursue civil actions against those who they allege have falsely accused them; and what plans he has to review the current arrangements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Anyone who knowingly makes a false accusation against a police officer may be prosecuted. It is open to all ranks of officer to take civil action against those who falsely accuse them. We consider that these arrangements are adequate.

Paisley (City Status)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the procedure for making application to elevate the town of Paisley to city status; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: City status in Scotland can be achieved only through the granting of a royal charter. No royal burgh charter has been granted in modern times and there are no plans to revive the practice.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out his target for the sale of Forestry Commission land in Scotland in the current year and for the next five years.

Sir Hector Monro: As announced in the Government's expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97, the Commission plans to sell 15,000 hectares of forest land in Britain in each of the next three years. The proportion of this that will be sold in Scotland will depend on the state of the market, particularly the demand for forest land in different parts of Britain, but the Commission estimates that it will be in the region of 70 per cent. As yet, no firm plans have been made for sales in subsequent years.

Police Pay and Conditions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to allowing the new police authorities to set their own pay and conditions; and what were his conclusions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Police pay and national conditions will continue to be prescribed by the Secretary of State under section 26 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967, taking into consideration recommendations made by the police negotiating board which includes representatives of police authorities. The Government accept that there should be greater local discretion over job-related allowances.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his current proposals or policies for performance-related pay in the police force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is considering agreements reached in the police negotiating board on police pay structures and conditions of service for all ranks which include links between pay and appraisal of performance. The Government intend to introduce pay arrangements which depend on appraisal of performance as soon as practicable.

Police Authorities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether future police authorities will be able to choose their own chair.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes. Joint police boards established after reorganisation of local government in Scotland will appoint their chairman from among their members, who will all be councillors of the constituent authorities.

Teachers (Illness)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many days work have been lost by teachers due to illness in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on teacher absences is not held centrally.

School Transport

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will undertake a study of the adequacy of safety standards that currently obtain in the transportation of children to school in Scotland;

(2) what plans he has to meet representatives of education authorities in Scotland to discuss safety in school transport;

(3) if he will publish the current rules relating to safety belts and other safety equipment on school transport vehicles in Scotland;

(4) what plans he has to make individual seats and safety harnesses obligatory on all school transport vehicles in Scotland;

(5) if he will estimate the additional cost of making individual seats and safety harnesses obligatory on all school transport vehicles in Scotland;

(6) if he will consider introducing members of staff as monitors on any double-decker buses used to transport children to school in Scotland;

(7) what consideration he has given to requiring manufacturers of minibuses for school transport to reinforce areas of the floor to enable seat belts to be fitted;

(8) what plans he has to impose stricter safety standards on education authorities involved in transportation of children to school;

(9) if he will consider making finance available to Scottish education authorities to enable them to finance safety improvements in school vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has a policy interest in terms of the general provision by local authorities of a school transport service. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has responsibility for vehicle safety matters and the relevant legislation on a United Kingdom basis, including policy on vehicle construction, the provision of seat belts in all vehicles and the three for two concession in respect of school children on school transport.

The Department of Transport has recently completed a survey on the full technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts nationally in minibuses and coaches and matters such as the three for two concession. It would therefore be inappropriate for the Scottish Office to conduct a separate survey in Scotland or to comment in advance on the outcome of the Department of Transport's review.

With regard to the provision of supervisors on school transport in Scotland, education authorities already have a duty of care, in law, for the safety of pupils when under their charge. It is therefore for them to decide how supervision should be provided for on school buses. We shall consider whether further measures need to be taken in the light of such decisions as may follow the Department of Transport's review.

On the question of financial assistance, in advance of, and without prejudice to, the Department of Transport's review, my right hon. Friend has agreed to a request from Strathclyde regional council for a capping disregard for additional current expenditure in 1994-95 in respect of additional costs to the council of school transport in dropping the three for two concession on dedicated school transport and requiring the fitting of seat belts on all contract minibuses.

Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any immediate plans to meet representatives of Scottish education authorities to discuss safety in school transport. We will, however, consider whether any such meeting might be appropriate in the light of the conclusions of the Department of Transport review.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what records and research findings are held within his Department of the number of homeless people who are registered on electoral registers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Department does not collect this information.

School Performance Tables

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the budgeted expenditure to date for (a) publication and (b) distribution of the school performance tables.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the information set out in the table:

Title	Cost of production £	Cost of printing £	Cost of distribution £	Total cost £

Legal Advice

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the provision of a network of independent advice and law centres throughout Scotland; and what response he has made to the aims of the Advice 2000 initiative launched by the Advice Services Alliance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 April 1994]: I recognise the good work carried out by existing advice and law centres in Scotland. It is local authorities which are best placed to decide whether there is an unmet need for advice in particular areas. Where there is urban deprivation, however, start-up funding can be provided through the urban programme.

I note that the Advice 2000 initiative is intended to improve further the quality and availability of advice.

Voluntary Advice Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of funding from the Scottish Office for voluntary advice services for the financial year 1993-94 and each of the previous 10 years; and how many schemes received funding in each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 April 1994]: Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available. Figures for the financial years 1989-90 to 1992-93 are given in the table. These indicate the level of funding from the Scottish Office for schemes run by voluntary organisations where the main aims included the provision of advice and information. Figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Financial year	Number of schemes	Level of funding £
1989-90	53	1,307,447
1990-91	49	1,217,851

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Norris: The Department's property managers have been able to provide the following information. Complete records are not available for the earlier years.

	Contracts	Guards	Annual value £
1994-95	[1]23	[1]35	[1]758,709

Maritime Distress and Safety Systems

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the percentage of Inmarsat C distress calls received by the United Kingdom Marine regional control centre are false alarms; and what inquiries he has made as a response.

Mr. Norris: No representations have been received on false Inmarsat-C distress calls.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to monitor the effectiveness of the global maritime distress and safety system.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom monitors the effectiveness of the global maritime distress and safety system by maintaining a record of distress calls received by our search and rescue authorities and their response. One outcome of this has been the identification of an unacceptable level of false alerts. This has been brought to the attention of the International Maritime Organisation.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with unions and owners on the effectiveness of the global maritime distress and safety system.

Mr. Norris: The introduction of the global maritime distress and safety system was thoroughly discussed with representative bodies of the ship owners and seafarers at all stages of its development. The implementation of the requirements and their effectiveness is discussed at the Maritime Radio Advisory Committee where these organisations are fully represented.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) under what authority the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising is seeking to appoint marketing communication advisers to promote investor interest in passenger rail franchises;

(2) what assessment he has made of the compatibility with the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising's statutory obligations of seeking to promote investor interest in the privatisation of rail franchises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Seeking to promote investor interest in rail franchises is an integral part of the Franchising Director's statutory duties to designate railway passenger services as eligible for provision under franchise agreements and to invite tenders for the right to provide these services from such persons as he sees fit. The Franchising Director's intention to draw on the expertise of marketing advisers is consistent with the Secretary of State's objectives set for him under section 5 of the Act to secure that railway passenger services in Great Britian, other than exempted services, are provided under franchise agreements as soon as reasonably practicable; and to secure an overall improvement in the quality of railway passenger and station services available to railway passengers.

Contractors

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the 20 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road contracts in each of the last two years giving, for each contractor, the value of the contracts received;

(2) if he will list for each of the last two years to date major construction contracts awarded by his Department worth over £250,000 at current prices indicating, in each case, which construction company was awarded the contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Since 1 April, responsibility for managing, maintaining and improving the national road network in England now lies with the Highways Agency. As the information requested by the hon. Member relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 21 April 1994:

You put down 2 Parliamentary Questions for answer by the Secretary of State concerning major construction contracts awarded during the last 2 years.

As the information you asked for concerns operational matters for which the Highways Agency is now responsible, as promised by the Minister, Robert Key, I am replying to your Questions.

You asked firstly about major construction contracts awarded during the last 2 years and which companies had won them.

Annex A attached gives the information you asked for in relation to contracts valued in excess of £1 million.

Your second question concerned the 20 contractors who had won the largest share of motorway and trunk road contracts. Annex B attached gives this information in relation to contracts worth in excess of £1 million.

The Agency does not currently keep central records of contracts below £1 million and this information cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Airport Charges

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comparisons he has made of airport charges levied by the BAA and those levied in the United States of America and other countries.

Mr. Norris: None. I refer the hon. Member to the airport charges index produced by TM Economics, discussed at pages 55-56 of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on BAA plc—a report on the economic regulation of the south-east airports companies including Heathrow Airport Ltd., Gatwick Airport Ltd. and Stansted Airport Ltd.—presented to the Civil Aviation Authority in June 1991. The Commission noted the difficulties of undertaking "fair" comparisons when the level of service offered by different operators varies. TME considered 40 airports; charges at Heathrow and Gatwick, for example, fell within the middle of the range of average charges.

TME produce this index annually; the most recent edition—1993—has shown that the charges at Heathrow and Gatwick have fallen relative to other airports.

Domestic Air Fares

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comparisons he has made of the cost of domestic air fares in the United Kingdom, the United States of America and other countries.

Mr. Norris: Comparisons of fare levels in different countries are subject to wide margins of error. The CAA recently published a range of fares comparisons in its document "Airline Competition in the Single European Market" (CAP 623). The broad conclusion was that fully flexible United Kingdom domestic fares were comparable with France, lower than Germany but higher than in some other EU states. The reasons for such differences are not at all clear. The position in the United States depended very much on the airline operating the service. Where a low-cost airline such as Southwest Airlines operated, fares were exceptionally low not only by the standards of the United Kingdom and Europe but also compared to other United States routes, on which fares were sometimes higher than in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to bring United Kingdom domestic air fares down.

Mr. Norris: The setting of air fares is essentially a matter for the commercial judgment of airlines. United Kingdom airlines had considerable freedom to compete by setting their own air fares on domestic routes for a number of years even before free pricing was introduced by the EC single market.

We believe that airlines should be free to set their own fares with a minimum of regulatory intervention. This is consistent with an open and competitive market and is in the best overall interests of users. Safeguards are, however, available under EC regulation 2409/92 to combat the exploitation of consumers by airlines charging excessively high fares.

Unlicensed Airfields

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints he has received in each of the last five years about alleged breaches of the regulations applying to unlicensed airfields.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 April 1994]: My Department does not keep a record of complaints about unlicensed airfields. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which body has the responsibility for ensuring regulatory compliance by the operators and users of unlicensed airfields.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 April 1994]: I refer to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member earlier today. The appropriate bodies will have responsibility for enforcement of any relevant legislation. The commander of an aircraft using an unlicensed aerodrome is responsible for his own safe operation, including satisfying himself that the aerodrome is suitable in all respects.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to change the regulations applying to unlicensed airfields.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 April 1994]: None.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the regulations which apply to unlicensed airfields.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 April 1994]: No regulations specifically apply to unlicensed airfields. The CAA has published guidance material: CAP 428 "Safety Standards at Unlicensed Aerodromes". Article number 87 of the Air Navigation order "Aviation Fuel at Aerodromes" would also apply. Other legislation applies to unlicensed airfields as appropriate.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all unlicensed airfields in the United Kingdom and the operators.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 April 1994]: There are no special registration procedures for unlicensed airfields and it is not therefore possible for me to provide a list of all such airfields and their operators.

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department now holds on the failure rates of public service vehicles at the annual roadworthiness test; and if he will specify the level of disaggregation available to him.

Mr. Key: I have asked the Vehicle Inspectorate chief executive to write to the hon. Member with this detailed information.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Gareth Wardell, dated 4 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the information his Department holds on failure rates for public service vehicles (PSVs) at annual roadworthiness tests, and the amount of detail available to him.

The Vehicle Inspectorate (VI) is responsible for the annual testing of HGVs and PSVs. VI maintains a database detailing the test record of each vehicle it tests. At its lowest level the database can provide basic information about whether a particular vehicle has passed or failed its annual roadworthiness test and the reason for failure. This detailed information is not made available to the general public for data protection reasons.

The database also provides regular management information on first annual tests and retests at a regional, national and test station level. It can be programmed to aggregate the results in different ways at additional cost. It no longer records operator types and does not yet produce information automatically about particular PSV operators. This is because vehicle information is not cross referenced with operator details. VI is working on solutions aimed at creating a full vehicle and operator database in the medium term.

In view of your interest I have enclosed a copy of VI's annual report for 1992-93. This gives details of national PSV test failure rates for the financial years 1988-89 to 1992-93, and provides a breakdown of the reasons for failure over the same period.

HEALTH

Hospital Information Support Systems

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what has been the cost of the Hospital Information Support Systems project in each year since its inception;

(2) what level of financial support her Department intends to make available to hospitals that have become trusts to continue the development of HISS.

Mr. Sackville: Integrated hospital systems were seen as a key feature of the future information management and technology in the acute sector and, when the national health service reforms were being formulated, were seen as important for the development of contracting. As soon as the NHS reforms were announced a team was set up to run projects to explore these matters.

Until recently the team dispersed sums to support projects of varying sizes, the amounts of which are shown in the table.

Year	£
1989-90	5,000,000
1990-91	7,500,000
1991-92	12,750,000
1992-93	21,215,000
1993-94	6,690,000

This phase is virtually complete and the team is involved primarily in tracking benefits realisation, disseminating results, assisting those considering a hospital information support system, supporting activities like consortia to get better value for money and vetting £1 million plus projects under the new approval process.

To complete the hospital information support system programme, a total of £1·668 million is being allocated to trusts for specific purposes in 1994-95. The further funding of HISS systems is a local responsibility.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many parliamentary questions to her Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if she will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Sackville: The number of answers given to parliamentary questions by the Department of Health between January 1989 and December 1993, recorded on the POLIS database as including a reference to part or all of the information not being available or involving disproportionate cost was 1,223. Details of each of these questions can be obtained from the POLIS database, access to which is available in the Library. The further information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

We are anxious to reduce the number of forms which currently have to be filled in by national health service units and returned to the Department. There is a limit to the amount of information required by the Department and the NHS executive on a national service which is regionally and locally administered. Release from the burden of filling in forms will give NHS units more time for activities with a greater bearing on direct patient care.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctors are employed (a) by the West Midlands health authority and (b) in the Coventry area; and what were the figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: There were 2,029 whole-time equivalent registrars, senior house officers and house officers employed in the west midlands region in 1991 and 2,056 in 1992. In 1991, 142—estimated—were employed in the Coventry area; in 1992 the figure had risen to 166.

There were 272 whole-time equivalent senior registrars in the west midlands region in 1991 and 277 in 1992. The number working in the Coventry area is not available.

Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

British Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that the British pharmaceutical industry remains competitive with foreign rivals.

Dr. Mawhinney: The British pharmaceutical industry is outstandingly competitive; it directly employs about 80,000 people in the United Kingdom and had a positive balance of trade of about £1·5 billion in 1993. This results from a wide range of factors. So far as my responsibilities are concerned, we have negotiated a new pharmaceutical price regulation scheme for a period of five years from October 1993. This provides continued stability to the pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom, recognises research and development through the prices paid by the national health service for its medicines and encourages the efficient and competitive development and supply of medicines to pharmaceutical markets in this and other countries.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private security firms have been employed by her Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if she will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Sackville: The Department employed four private security firms in 1993-94. The estimated total expenditure for these contracts is £700,000 and the estimated total of guards employed was 30. To provide information prior to 1993-94 would incur disproportionate cost.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to improve the quality of procedures for the identification and treatment of breast cancer; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The chief medical officer's expert advisory group on cancer is currently preparing advice for health authorities on the organisation of cancer services. These recommendations will be put to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State later this year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a target of reducing levels of death from breast cancer to the OECD average.

Mr. Sackville: Reducing deaths from breast cancer among women invited for screening by at least 25 per cent. from 1990 by the year 2000 is a target in the Government's "The Health of the Nation" initiative.

Premature Mortality

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the latest studies funded by her Department of causes of premature mortality related to (a) environmental pollution, (b) deprived material conditions of work and (c) other forms of material deprivation.

Mr. Sackville: The small area health statistics unit at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine is funded by the Department of Health, Department of Environment, Health and Safety Executive, Scottish Office, Welsh Office and Northern Ireland Office. The unit is conducting a number of studies to determine whether cancers are associated with environmental pollution associated with local sources of pollution.

These are as follows:

1. Cancer incidence and mortality around PBI Ltd., Waltham Abbey.
2. TV and Radio Transmitters: the initial local concern was around Sutton Coldfield, but there are others which are included in the study.
3. Municipal Incinerators: the study covered 72 incinerators around Great Britain, being all those licensed sites which burn household, commercial and/or industrial waste and for which the relevant information was available.
4. BP Petrochemical Works, Baglan Bay.
5. Vinyl Chloride Works.

The Department is also funding the following:

1. A research project which will examine the health effects of the December 1991 air pollution episode in London and is due to be completed later this year.
2. The Social Medicine and Health Services Research Unit which is currently undertaking two research projects, due to be completed later this year, into the incidence of asthma in the United Kingdom and the European Community.

The Department also supports the newly formed Medical Research Council Institute for Environment and Health at the University of Leicester. This will act as a focus to co-ordinate work on chemical environmental pollutants.

The Department has not funded any studies into causes of premature mortality related to conditions of work or "other forms of deprivation".

Health Expenditure, London

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) of 12 April, Official Report, column 72, if she will give the figures for expenditure per capita for London for (a) district health authorities and (b) family health services authorities, including expenditure by the London postgraduate hospitals and special health authorities.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is spent per capita by London district health authorities and special health authorities on health services for residents of (i) inner London and (ii) outer London; and what is the national average expenditure per capita by district health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure per capita by district health authorities in inner London, at £553, is higher than that of all the other major cities included in my reply to the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) on 12 April at column 72, with the exception of Manchester. When special health authorities' spending is added to DHA spending, inner London per capita spend is 56 per cent. above the national average.

1992-93 per capita spend by inner and outer London district health authorities and the national average spend by DHAs in England are given in the table. The table also shows the effects of including expenditure by the London postgraduate SHAs which were funded centrally in 1992-93. The family health services authority figures given in my reply to the hon. Member for Dulwich are unchanged.

	DHA spend		DHA spend including SHAs
Inner	553	46	603	56
Outer	398	5	415	8
Total London	460	22	490	27
Total England	378	—	368	—

Notes:

1. Inner London defined as in the Report of the Enquiry into London's Health Services, Medical Education and Research (Tomlinson Report).
2. SHA 1992-93 expenditure apportioned to DHAs based on analysis of district of residence of 1993-94 referrals.

Road Traffic Act 1988

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will estimate how much money (a) her Department and (b) NHS trusts expect to recover under section 157 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 for the provisions of treatment to road accident victims for the years 1994 and 1995;

(2) if she will list the total amount of money recovered by (a) her Department and (b) NHS trusts under section 157 of the Road Traffic Act for the provisions of treatment to road accident victims for each year since 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Income from Road Traffic Act charges as a whole—sections 157 and 158—was £9·1 million in 1990-91, the last year in which these data were collected centrally.

Carers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken as to the impact of the community care changes on carers; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Research is currently being funded by the Department into the extent to which carers are benefiting from the community care reforms.

Youth Treatment Service

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the annual report of the chief executive of the youth treatment service for 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library today. The report contains, at annex 14, the youth treatment service's receipts and payments account for the year ended 31 March 1993. These accounts, which are unaudited and have no form of endorsement by the National Audit Office, represent the service's view of the financial outcome for the year.

Drugs

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to examine the effectiveness of treatment services for drug misuers; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am concerned to ensure that services for drug misusers work to clear objectives and that we are able to assess how effective these services are in terms of delivering reductions in drug misuse, and the harm associated with it. I have decided therefore to establish a task force to undertake a wide-ranging review of the effectiveness of treatment services for drug misusers. Membership of the task force, which will be chaired by the Reverend Dr. John Polkinghorne, president of Queen's college, Cambridge, comprises experts from the drugs field and people from different backgrounds who will bring a fresh perspective to issues in this important area. They are:

Mr. Denis O'Connor (Deputy Chief Constable of Kent).
Dr. Michael Farrell (Consultant Psychiatrist in drug dependence at Maudsley Hospital).
Dame Margaret Fry (non-executive member of South and West Regional Health Authority).
Dr. Silvain Edouard Josse (General Practitioner).
Mr. James Kay (Director of Healthwise, Liverpool and member of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs).
Ms Rosemary Ramsay (Lawyer, and Vice Chairman of Brixton Drugs Project).
Miss Esther Rantzen (Member of the Health Education Authority).
Mr. Tony Shaw (Chief Executive of Southampton and South West Hampshire Health Commission).
Mr. Tony Sheehan (Nurse).
Mr. David Taylor (Audit Commission).
Mr. Rodney Walker (Chairman of the NHS Trust Federation).
The Rt. Reverend William John Westwood (Bishop of Peterborough).

The chief medical officer's consultant adviser on drug misuse, Dr. John Strang, will be medical adviser to the task force.

The terms of reference of the review are:

"To conduct a comprehensive survey of clinical, operational and cost effectiveness of existing services for drug misusers; to review current policy in relation to the principal objective of assisting drug misusers to achieve and maintain a drug-free state, and the secondary objective of reducing harm caused to themselves and others by those who continue to use drugs; to make recommendations where appropriate and to report to Ministers."

The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs will also be represented on the task force, and the central drugs co-ordination unit will take a close interest in their work.

The work of the task force will complement the role of the central drugs co-ordination unit, which has been established to ensure that, through the development of a comprehensive and co-ordinated strategy, we get best possible value for the significant resources invested by the Government in the fight against drugs. To ensure that close links are maintained, the director of the central co-ordination unit will have observer status on the task force.

Ophthalmics

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Leeds general practitioner practices were sent letters from consultant ophthalmic surgeons at the Leeds general infirmary explaining that their patients could not be admitted for elective surgery until the start of the 1994-95 financial year.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the United Leeds Teaching Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Tony Clegg, chairman of the trust, for details.

South West Thames Health Authority

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports she has received from the South West Thames health authority concerning the extent to which the accident and emergency departments at (a) Ashford hospital, (b) St. Peter's hospital and (c) Frimley Park hospital met patients charter standards during the quarter ended 31 December 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The report from South West Thames regional health authority for the quarter ending 31 December 1993 on the accident and emergency standard —initial assessment in accident and emergency within five minutes—shows:

	Per cent.
Ashford Hospital NHS Trust	37
St. Peter's Hospital NHS Trust	100
Frimley Park Hospital NHS Trust	71

North West Surrey health authority was told that action must be taken to ensure improved performance.

Provisional figures for the quarter ended 31 March are as follows:

	Per cent.
Ashford Hospital NHS Trust	93
St. Peter's Hospital NHS Trust	98
Frimley Park Hospital NHS Trust	90

Allergies

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether adequate advice is being provided to general practitioners in England and Wales about the treatment of choice in cases of severe allergic reactions; and what steps she is taking to ensure that the necessary equipment is readily available and easy to use.

Mr. Sackville: The next edition of the chief medical officer's update, which goes to all doctors, will include advice on the management of anaphylaxis, particularly in respect of peanuts. The British National Formulary, which is distributed twice a year free of charge to all prescribers, contains a section on anaphylaxis and the treatment available.

"NHS Changes in London"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will halt further distribution of the "NHS Changes in London" leaflet pending an inquiry by the Committee of Public Accounts;

(2) which company is employed by her Department to distribute the leaflet "NHS Changes in London"; how much they have been paid; and when they are distributing the leaflet to each London borough;

(3) to which areas the leaflet "NHS Changes in London" has already been distributed; and to which London areas it is not planned to distribute it.

Dr. Mawhinney: The leaflet "NHS Changes in London" was targeted at households within the area bounded by the M25 and aims to address key questions about health services in London which have been and continue to be put to the Department. The Central Office of Information was employed to arrange distribution of the leaflet. The estimated total cost is £150,000 of which distribution costs are estimated to be £86,500. Distribution was completed by 9 April and there are no further distribution plans.

Ms Bridget O'Connell

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department has had with North Thames health authority and the former North East Thames health authority about the case of the consultant Ms Bridget O'Connell.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a complex case, which I hope will be resolved soon. Suspensions are a contractual matter between employer and employee and neither the Department nor Ministers are directly involved in such matters.

Out-patients

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of an out-patient appointment.

Mr. Sackville: The average cost of an out-patient attendance during 1992-93 was £59·21—provisional.

Supplies Authority

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of the members and chairs of (a) the NHS supplies authority and (b) the Bromley health authority on 1 April.

Mr. Sackville: The chairman of the National Health Service Supplies Authority is Sir Robin Buchanan. The non-executive members are Mrs. Alison Cook, Mr. Eric Greenhalgh, Mr. Jim Hammond, Mr. Fred Hoult and Miss Catherine McLoughlin. The executive members are Mr. Terry Hunt, Mr. Evan Sutherland, Mr. Richard Chantler, Mrs. Roxanne Sutton and Mr. Chris Uden.

The chairman of Bromley health authority is Miss Catherine McLoughlin. The non-executive members are Mr. Charles Ilsley, Ms Maureen Theobold and Dr. Robin Kirby. There are currently two vacancies. The executive members are Ms Claire Perry, Mr. Philip Lloyd, Mr. Kevin Barton, Mr. Robin Lorimer and Dr. Jackie Spilby.

There is no statutory bar to the appointment of chairmen or members of other health authorities to the NHS Supplies Authority.

Medical Certificates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 78, what specific categories of medical certificates are on the defined list of medical certificates issued free of charge under GP's terms of service; and what guidelines her Department issues to GPs for appropriate charging rates relating to categories of certificates not on that list.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is available in schedule 9 of the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, copies of which are available in the Library.

Dental Services

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to exclude crown and bridgework from the treatments available to fee paying NHS patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government are preparing their response to Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report on dental services. Our proposals will be published in due course.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to raise NHS dental fees in the financial year 1994-95.

Dr. Mawhinney: General dental practitioners received a 3 per cent. increase in their national health service fees from 1 April 1994 which fully implemented the Doctors and Dentists Review Body recommendation for 1994-95. The Government will, of course, keep the public expenditure implications of this increase under review throughout the year.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients presented themselves at general medical practices in each year between 1979 and 1993 inclusive, with dental-related problems.

Dr. Mawhinney: General medical practitioners are not required to provide such information.

Children's Hospital Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish or place in the Library reports from district health authorities due to be submitted through regional health authorities to the management directorate of the NHS excecutive by 1 May concerning the position in relation to the central guidance issued in 1991 on "Welfare of Children and Young People in Hospital", paragraph 6.3, on the specifications for the nurse staffing of children's hospital services and progress made in achieving the standards detailed therein.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responses to the survey of nursing staffing in children's wards and other hospital departments where children are cared for are due shortly, and will require proper aggregation and analysis. The results will be made available.

Water Pollution, Worcester

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will conduct an inquiry into the health hazards associated with the pollution of drinking water in the Worcester area on Friday 15 April; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: People were advised at the time not to drink the tap water. This was a sensible precaution until an analysis could be made to determine what pollutants were present. Those subsequently detected in the drinking water were present at such low levels that no short-term or long-term health effects were anticipated. We understand that some cases of gastric upset and nausea have been reported by some local general practitioners, but it is not possible to say with certainty whether these were caused by the polluted water.

NHS Trusts

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure by each individual first and second-wave trust in 1991-92 and 1992-93, as appropriate on external contract staffing and consulting services.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 March 1994]: The information requested is shown in tables which will be placed in the Library. Figures for 1992-93 are provisional and have not yet been validated and are therefore not wholly reliable.

The figures are not comparable with those for earlier years but confirm the effectiveness of the Government's policy of encouraging overall value for money in the national health service by using alternative sources to supply a range of services. The expenditure by trusts in many cases relates to services provided within the NHS either by other trusts or health authorities. These services range from linen supplies and transport to computing services; it also covers payments to other hospitals for services performed by their consultants and senior registrars.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 22 April 1994

HOME DEPARTMENT

United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the fairness and confidentiality of the tendering processes used in the recent sale of assets belonging to the publicly owned United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd.;

(2) if he will investigate the circumstances around the tendering processes used in the recent sale of the publicly owned United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd.;

(3) if he will make a statement about the recent sale of the publicly owned United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd. to the Racecourse Holdings Trust.

Mr. Charles Wardle: United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd. is owned by the Levy Board and its disposal is a matter for that board.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings he or officials of his Department had with either the Jockey Club or the publicly owned United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd. prior to, and concerning, the recent sale of United Racecourse's assets.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the assets of the Racecourse Holdings Trust are publicly owned.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. Racecourse Holdings Trust is a private company owned by the Jockey Club.

Parliamentary Boundaries

Mr. [illegible]: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the chairman of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales the arrangements and timing for holding inquiries into the commission's proposals for the counties of Clwyd and Dyfed; and if he will urge the commission to move the dates away from the European parliamentary elections.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The arrangements and timing of local inquiries are a matter for the commission. I understand from the commission that, in making arrangements for the inquiries, it took into account the date of the elections to the European Parliament, but decided that it was not possible to postpone the inquiries without an unacceptable risk to its achieving the statutory deadline of 31 December 1994 for submission of the final report on the current review of parliamentary constituencies in Wales.

Asylum Applications, Burundi and Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum he has received from refugees from Burundi and Rwanda; how many have been granted; where applicants are being held; and how long the decision-making process takes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Available information on applications and decisions in the period 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1994 is given in the table. Information for 1990 and 1991 is published in tables 4.1 and 4.2 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin Issue 19/93 "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1992", and for prior years in the corresponding tables in earlier volumes of this annual publication. A copy of this publication is in the Library of the House.

Information on the average decision time for decisions in recent months is not yet available.

At 19 April 1994, no asylum applicants from Burundi or Rwanda were held in detention.

Fire Safety (Retail Premises)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to make the fitting of sprinkler systems to all large retail premises mandatory;

(2) what representations he has received about the fire safety of supermarkets and superstores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have received three written representations about the use of sprinkler systems as a means of controlling the spread of fire, preserving life and minimising fire damage in supermarkets and superstores.

Under present arrangements the installation of sprinklers in new superstores is a matter for building regulations, and in existing buildings, if appropriate, could be covered by a fire certificate. However, any provisions to require a general installation of sprinkler systems in existing large premises would require primary legislation.

Fire safety issues are under review by a scrutiny team and, as my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment said on 29 March, Official Report, columns 660-61, any changes would be made in the light of its findings and after consultation with interested parties.

The need for such provisions will be carefully considered by the Government in the light of the scrutiny team's findings and those of our recent review of the Fire Precautions Act 1971.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 474, what was the total cost in January of the police operations concerning the M11 link road through Wanstead including police overtime payments, expenses and allowances and other costs.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 22 February 1994]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the additional manpower costs of policing the M11 link road protest on Wanstead common during January were £16,163. This figure includes overtime payments and the related national insurance contribution, but excludes basic pay and allowances.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each local education authority the pupil capacity of those schools which have been approved for grant-maintained status and the number of pupils attending grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table below shows full-time pupil numbers in January 1993 at schools which are currently grant-maintained in each local education authority area.

Up-to-date figures on the capacity of grant-maintained schools are not available. However, my right hon. Friend intends to make regulations shortly under section 21 of the Education Act 1993 requiring LEAs and the Funding Agency for Schools, where it has relevant planning responsibilities, to submit annual information on the numbers of surplus places in LEA-maintained and grant-maintained schools respectively, beginning this year.

Note: Figures for numbers of pupils are derived from the Department's January 1993 Schools Census.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he plans to issue circulars arising from the Education Act 1993 concerning (a) the supply of school places and (b) the promotion of new grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: A draft circular on the supply of school places and guidance for promoters of new grant-maintained schools will be issued by the Department later in the summer.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many surplus places there are in grant-maintained schools; and what is the figure as a percentage of the admission limit for such schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not currently available. However, my right hon. Friend intends to make regulations shortly under section 21 of the Education Act 1993 requiring LEAs and the Funding Agency for Schools, where it has relevant planning responsibilities, to submit annual information on the numbers of surplus places in LEA maintained and grant-maintained schools respectively, beginning this year.

Schools (Parents' Choice)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the figures in total and for each local education authority of admission appeals by parents failing to obtain a place for their child in the school of their choice, and of this total how many and what percentage (a) were withdrawn before appeals committee stage, (b) were settled to mutual satisfaction before committee stage, (c) were rejected by committee and (d) were decided in the parent's favour by the committee for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Sixth-form Colleges

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent by the Further Education Funding Council on (a) sixth-form colleges and (b) further education colleges in North Yorkshire in 1993-94; and what is its budget for (i) sixth-form colleges and (ii) further education colleges in North Yorkshire in 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council's recurrent funding allocations for 1993-94 covered the period 1 April 1993 to 31 July 1994. Allocations to colleges in North Yorkshire for this period were as follows.

	£m
Sixth form colleges	6·509
Further education colleges	31·544

The funding council has not yet announced its allocations to individual colleges for the academic year 1994-95.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Boswell: Day security in the Department's London offices has been provided by two different private security firms since it was contracted out in 1988. Night security at the Department's Darlington office has been provided by two companies over the past 10 years.

The approximate annual value of these contracts has been:

Financial Year	£000's
1984-85	8
1985-86	20
1986-87	22
1987-88	23
1988-89	103
1989-90	128
1990-91	163
1991-92	244
1992-93	334
1993-94	95

Between 1988-89 and 1992-93 security was provided, or part-funded, for more than one London site pending consolidation of London-based staff into a single headquarters building.

On average five guards have been employed for each year since 1988.

PRIME MINISTER

Stephan Adolphus Kock

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister whether Mr. Stephan Adolphus Kock was at any time between 1 January 1984 and 31 December 1989 in the service of the Government or any of its agencies or wholly owned companies or carried out any functions for, or on behalf of, the Government or any of its agencies or wholly owned companies.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 19 April 1994, Official Report, column 432.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the planned wind-up dates for each of the urban development corporations and the planned expenditure for each development corporation in each year at current prices until the exit strategies take effect.

Mr. Baldry: The planned wind-up date of each urban development corporation is set out in the table:

	Date
Bristol	[1]31 December 1994
Leeds	31 March 1995
Central Manchester	31 March 1996
Birmingham Heartlands	31 March 1997
Sheffield
Trafford Park
Black Country	31 March 1995
London Docklands	31 March 1998
Merseyside
Plymouth
Teesside
Tyne and Wear

[1] An extension of lifetime to 31 December 1995 is currently under consideration.

Grant in aid voted to each UDC for the current financial year is contained in the supply estimates 1994-95, class VII Environment. The Government's overall expenditure plans for UDCs from 1994-95 to 1996-97 are set out in figure 46 of my Department's annual report Cm. 2507. Formal allocations to individual development corporations for the next financial year will be made upon completion of the current public expenditure survey.

Water Pollution, Worcester

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on water quality in the River Severn at Worcester;

(2) if he will establish an independent inquiry into the National Rivers Authority's responsibility for and response to the pollution of the River Severn and water supplies in the Worcester area on Friday 15 April;

(3) what advice he has received from the drinking water inspectorate on the quality of water supplies from the Barbourne treatment works in Worcester; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what inquiry or inquiries are being conducted by his Department, or any organisation for which his Department is responsible, into the pollution of the River Severn and water supplies in the Worcester area on Friday 15 April; and if he will publish the results of all such inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 April 1994]: The drinking water inspectorate is carrying out an investigation into the effects of this incident on drinking water supplies and the handling of action to deal with it; its findings will be published. Timing may be affected by whether there is any need for prosecution arising from the incident. The National Rivers Authority is establishing the facts relating to the pollution of the river system and its own response. Subject to any legal constraints relating to possible prosecutions it will make its findings public. When the results of these inquiries are available to me, I shall decide whether there is a need for any further investigation of any aspect of the matter.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Jeremy Turner

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to receive a report from the Home Department regarding its investigation into the conduct of the coroner of Ceredigion in relation to the inquiries into the death of Mr. Jeremy Turner.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A report on the outcome of the investigation by the Home Department is expected by the end of May at the latest.

EMPLOYMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered over the last five years because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally, how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of answers given by the Department to parliamentary questions from January 1989 to December 1993 recorded in the POLIS database as including a reference to part or all of the information being available only at disproportionate cost or because the information was not held centrally was 212. This represents around 2 per cent. of the total number of POLIS entries for written answers in that period.

Details of each of these questions can be obtained from the POLIS database, access to which is available in the Library. The further information requested is not currently available and could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Asthma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated loss of time from work caused by asthma.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: From answers given in a supplement to the 1990 labour force survey it is estimated that 79,000 days were lost in the previous 12 months as a result of asthma caused by work and a further 223,000 days were lost as a result of pre-existing asthma made worse by work. These figures are based on the interviewees' own report of the cause of their symptoms.

WALES

Taff Merthyr Colliery

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of Government or public funding proposed in connection with the closure of Taff Merthyr colliery; how much money was pledged in October 1992; how much has been paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: In October 1992 the then Secretary of State for Wales announced that up to £43 million would be made available to assist all areas in Wales affected by the colliery closures. Subsequently £18.09 million was allocated for coal closure mitigation action in the Taff Merthyr area and of this £16.36 million has been spent. This figure excludes training allowances which cannot be separately identified and £1.73 million of European regional development funding.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, (1) pursuant to his answer of 11 April, Official Report, column 214, what representation he received prior to the publication of the Bill (a) in favour and (b) in opposition to the inclusion of Pentyrch in the proposed new unitary authority of Cardiff;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 625, what representation he received in favour of the inclusion of Pentyrch in the Cardiff unitary authority prior to the publication of the White Paper.

Mr. Redwood: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Princess of Wales Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made for funding the Ysbyty Bangor and Princess of Wales hospital, Bridgend ophthalmic treatment centres, and the general surgery treatment centre at Princess of Wales hospital, Bridgend.

Mr. Redwood: 1994-95 funding for the Bridgend treatment centre is:

Surgical centre	499,535
Ophthalmic centre	908,210

The ophthalmic centre at Ysbyty Bangor ceased operating as a treatment centre from 1 April 1993.

Hip and Knee Replacements

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 460, what information he has received from the Rhydlafar treatment centre in relation to the numbers of hip and knee replacement operations carried out via the treatment centre procedure during 1993-94; what assessment he has made of the comparison of the numbers of hip and knee joints funded for that year and the numbers carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The orthopaedic treatment centre, Rhydlafar, carried out 240 hip-knee replacements in 1993-94—seven less than funded. Those scheduled operations were postponed in late March 1994 for medical reasons, following pre-treatment assessment of the patients at the centre, and are being re-scheduled for the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 460, of which purchasing health authorities are to be allocated the 291 hip-knee replacement operations at the Rhydlafar centre; if he will specify knee operations and hip operations separately; if he will list on a comparable basis the knee operations and hip operations allocated to the health authorities in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; what provisions he has made for general practitioner fundholders within that allocation to each health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Allocations of places at the treatment centres are made to health authorities. The hip and knee replacement operations at the orthopaedic treatment centre for 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 are:

Authority	Hips			Knees
	1992-93[1]	1993-94[2]	1994-95[3]	1992-93[1]	1993-94[2]	1994-95[3]

TOTAL	164	156	174	63	91	117

[1] Completed operations.
[2] Includes 5 hip and 2 knee operations deferred to 1994-95.
[3] Allocation.

GP fundholders have to bid to their district health authority for a share of treatment centre places which are included in the authorities' contracts with the centres. Subject to that, GP fundholders may refer patients direct to the centres and there is no charge to their budgets.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the discontinuation of the use of the Zimmer CPT artificial hip joint in the hip replacement part of the treatment centre funding allocation; and what allowance he has made in the allocation of £178,000 for joint revision surgery within the Cardiff Royal group for the excess numbers of replacements required for defective, or defectively fitted Zimmer CPT hip joints.

Mr. Redwood: None. The use of particular items of equipment within the orthopaedic treatment centre, including the joint revision programme, is a matter for South Glamorgan health authority which is required to obtain prostheses from sources on the Department of Health register of approved manufacturers.

Health Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made for the publication of information in Welsh health statistics indicating clearly the relationship between investment in defined health gain target areas and actual realised health gain in those sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The annual report of the chief medical officer, published in December 1993, summarised the progress being made in each of the 10 health gain priority areas. Further details, including information on the investment in each health gain area, is available from the published plans of local health authorities.

Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made in relation to the transfer of work from the Welsh Joint Education Committee and the Welsh Language Education Development Committee to the Curriculum and Assessment Committee for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The work associated with securing an adequate supply of Welsh language classroom materials, previously done by the Welsh language education development committee—WLEDC—and the Welsh Office is being done by the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales. ACAC appointments include former WJEC staff previously working for the WLEDC. These appointments, and other arrangements that have been made, should ensure that ACAC is able to benefit from the experience and understanding gained by the WLEDC.

Environment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to issue guidelines akin to planning policy guidance note 15 regarding development and the environment in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I consulted on draft planning policy guidance on historic buildings and conservation areas—PPG 15-Wales—on 4 November 1993. We are considering the responses to that consultation exercise.

Wetland Birds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for providing an alternative habitat for redshank and dunlin and other wetland bird species covered by the 1979 European wild birds directive that are expected to be displaced by the proposed Cardiff Bay barrage.

Mr. Redwood: The proposals for compensation measures for dunlin, redshank and other wetland bird species are those outlined in the feasibility study by Mason Pittendrigh and David Bellamy Associates published in February 1993.

TRANSPORT

School Minibuses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 438, if he will give a breakdown of the regional casualty figures for school minibuses by the number of (a) deaths and (b) injuries.

Mr. Key: Estimates of the information requested are shown in the table. It is not possible to identify school minibuses in the road injury accident data collection system. However, it is possible to identify school pupil casualties in minibuses, during journeys to and from school, and also in other types of journey. Both these categories are included in the table along with children of school age, classified as school pupils, but not necessarily travelling in a school minibus on a school activity.

Domestic Properties

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of domestic properties currently in the ownership of his Department in each region of England; how many in each region are currently (a) occupied and (b) unoccupied; and how many of the occupied properties are held on each kind of tenure.

Mr. Key: As this question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Terry Lewis, dated 21 April 1994:

As you probably know, since the creation of the Highways Agency earlier this month, it falls to me as Chief Executive to write to MPs who have tabled questions on matters which relate to operational matters of the Highways Agency, and to give the information requested.

The attached table sets out the position on domestic properties held in management by the Highways Agency as at 31 March 1994 (the latest figures available for our South East Region is 31 December 1993), in the form you asked.

As at the 31 March 1994 the number of domestic properties in management is 3,816, these are broken down as follows:

Region	Total	Occupied	Vacant	Fixed tenure	Periodic tenure	Other types of tenure
EMRO	92	62	30	61	1	—

[1] The figures for SERO are at the 31 December 1993.
[2] This includes a large number that are unlettable for various reasons.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the report of the 1987 public inquiry into the proposed Birmingham northern relief road under the terms of the Government's new code on open Government.

Mr. Key: No. As my predecessor explained in his written reply to the hon. Member on 2 June 1992, at columns 505-6 the draft orders which were the subject of the inquiry held in 1988 have been withdrawn and the report would not be relevant to the scheme now proposed.

Road Building and Maintenance

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by his Department since 1 April 1979 in (a) each standard region and (b) in each county or former metropolitan county on building, improving and maintaining roads.

Mr. Key: The following tables give (a) the total expenditure on motorways and trunk roads, broken down by standard region, from 1982-83 to 1992-93; (b) the amount of transport supplementary grant paid to each local authority from 1986-87 to 1994-95; (c) the total Department of Transport expenditure by standard region on building, improving and maintaining roads from 1986-87 to 1992-93. Figures are not available for earlier years or for motorway and trunk road expenditure broken down by county.

[1] Expenditure figures cover motorway and trunk road expenditure as defined in footnote (1) to table (a), and Transport Supplementary Grant.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current timetable for progress and completion of the Jubilee line.

Mr. Norris: The planned construction period is 53 months, with completion in early 1998.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements have been made for security at the site of the initial workings of the Jubilee line in consideration of its proximity to the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Norris: London Underground Ltd. has a legally binding agreement with the Corporate Officer of the House and it is fulfilling all the requirements of that agreement.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to restrict heavy goods vehicles to the inside two lanes on four-lane motorways.

Mr. Key: None. To do so would deny the road haulage industry the benefits of motorway widening and could have an adverse effect on road safety.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for how many regular publications he was responsible in 1993-94; what was their circulation; and how many were obtainable by subscription.

Mr. Norris: In the financial year 1993-94 the Secretary of State was responsible for 64 regular publications. Circulation was within the Department of Transport and to public bodies such as local authorities. None of them was on subscription.

Coastguard Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made to launch the Coastguard Agency on 30 March; and if he will give full details of all costs associated with the promotion of this event.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 29 March 1994]: My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping formally launched the Coastguard Agency at a press briefing held on 30 March in the agency's headquarters in Southampton. At about the same time press briefings were also held at a number of HM Coastguard's 21 rescue centres around the coast. The final costs associated with the launch on 30 March are expected to be in the region of £4,000, which includes £5 per head for the buffet lunch for staff of the agency, used to mark the occasion in various ways.

TREASURY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered over the past five years; because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Sir John Cope: Around 160 parliamentary questions were not answered fully and substantively in the five calendar years 1989-93 either because the information requested was not available or because it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. This represents less than 1½ per cent. of the questions answered by Treasury Ministers.

Determining precisely how many of these questions could now be answered would be a major exercise which would itself be disproportionately costly to undertake. However, I would expect there to be very few instances where information could now be provided which was not available previously.

VAT (Fuel)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the loss of revenue from the imposition of value added tax on fuel in (a) 1994-95 and (b) 1995-96 as a consequence of (i) the compensation provisions and (ii) pre-payment by consumers.

Sir John Cope: The Government have made available a generous package of help for pensioners, and those on low incomes, worth £2,500 million over three years. I do not expect that there will be any loss of tax revenue from the compensation package. The revenue loss from pre-payment of fuel bills by consumers will be very small in relation to the total revenue from VAT on fuel and power.

Shipping Industry

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for assisting the British shipping industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The health of the merchant fleet is clearly a matter of great concern both inside and outside the House. The Government have made it clear that we recognise the very important contribution which shipping makes to the economy, and the essential role which the industry can be called on to play in a national emergency. And we have shown in the past our willingness to help with the problems which it faces.

We recognise that it is common for shipping companies overseas to benefit from special tax provisions. We believe that such special provisions introduce distortions which can inhibit competition and lead to the inefficient allocation of resources. We will be raising these points forcefully with the European Commission.

However, we also recognise that, competitively, tax measures available overseas put our shippers at a particular disadvantage. We have therefore decided to introduce a provision which will allow capital allowance balancing charges for ships to be rolled over for a period of up to three years from the date on which the ship is disposed of, to be set off against subsequent expenditure on ships within that period. The amount of any balancing charge which can be rolled over will be limited to the amount needed to ensure that no tax liability arises as a result of a ship's disposal. We estimate that this measure will benefit the shipping industry by up to £20 million per annum in a full year. In drawing up this provision we will be considering whether it should be restricted to ships on the United Kingdom register; and in doing so will take account of what our European Union partners do.

As with any measures of this sort we have an obligation to notify the Commission of the proposal. Subject to the outcome of discussions with the Commission, we will be bringing forward the necessary legislation in next year's Finance Bill, with retrospective effect from 21 April 1994. The draft legislation will be made available by the Inland Revenue as soon as possible.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take to assist the Merchant Navy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Dover (Mr. Shaw) and for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 21 April at columns 597-98 and to the hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) today.

Valuation Office Executive Agency

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what targets will be set for the Valuation Office executive agency for the year 1994-95.

Sir John Cope: I have set the following key targets for the agency in 1994-95:

OPERATIONAL TARGETS

Council tax

To clear in aggregate some 730,000 appeals against the council tax valuation lists by 31 December 1994.

Non-domestic rating

To clear 260,000 appeals against the 1990 non-domestic rating lists.

To complete the revaluation of some 1·7 million non-domestic properties for new rating lists coming into effect on 1 April 1995.

Direct taxes

To undertake 75,000 valuation cases for the Inland Revenue for capital gains and inheritance tax purposes.

Other

To undertake 66,000 cases (and achieve receipts of some £25 million) in respect of chargeable work for other Government Departments, public bodies and local authorities.

FINANCIAL PERFORMANCE AND COST EFFICIENCY

To ensure the agency's net operating costs are at least fully covered by receipts.

To achieve efficiency savings of at least 4 per cent. on the agency's gross expenditure.

To break even, year on year, within each business segment after charging for the full cost of services including notional interest of 6 per cent. on the average working capital.

QUALITY OF SERVICE

To reply to 90 per cent. of all correspondence within 28 days of receipt and the remaining 10 per cent. within a further seven days.

To achieve agreed or specified time limits in 95 per cent. of cases undertaken.

To achieve a specified valuation quality standard in 83 per cent. of cases carried out.

Further details are set out in the agency's business plan for 1994-95, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Taxation and Benefit Expenditure

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing (a) the percentage of gross national product accounted for by taxation and social security spending and (b) unemployment rates in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 April 1994]: The information requested is shown in the table. The figures given are presented in financial year terms and as a percentage of gross domestic product, following conventions used in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Per cent./year

	(a) Non-North Sea tax burden[2,3,4]	Social security expenditure[3,5]	(b) Unemployment[6]

[2] Non-North Sea taxes, social security contributions and the community charge as a percentage of non-North Sea GDP. Figures are on an accruals basis.
[3] Based on money GDP figures adjusted for the years before 1990-91 to remove the distortion caused by the abolition of domestic rates.
[4] Including the council tax from 1993-94, when it replaced the community charge.
[5] Grand total benefit expenditure as a percentage of nominal GDP. Underlying expenditure figures are in cash terms. The figure for 1993-94 includes an amount for the spring supplementary estimate.
[6] United Kingdom seasonally adjusted unemployment. Rates are annual averages of the total unemployed workforce, of the first year quoted.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of NHS trust hospitals have now been awarded trust status; what percentage of the NHS budget is allocated to NHS trust hospitals; and what percentage of NHS patients are treated by NHS trust hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are 419 operational national health service trusts which represent 95 per cent. of all acute hospitals, community hospitals and units and ambulance services. We estimate that in 1994-95 around 96 per cent. of the revenue available for purchasing hospital and community health services will be spent in NHS trusts. Figures are not available for the percentage of NHS patients treated in NHS trusts for 1993-94.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure by national health service trusts, regional and district health authorities and family health services authorities on purchase of health care from non-national health service providers in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on purchase of health care from non-national health service providers in 1991-92 is shown in the table. The figure for family health services authorities is that for purchases by general practitioner fundholders of hospital services from private providers. In 1990-91 this category of expenditure was not separately analysed and was not available centrally.

	£000s
NHS trusts	12,204
Regional health authorities	32,746
District health authorities	159,818
Family health services authorities	3,698

Source: Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities and FHSAs; financial returns of NHS trusts.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was her policy in respect of the requests for repayment of public dividend capital by NHS trusts in each financial year since 1991-92; and how many NHS trusts will be requested to make such payments in respect of each year.

Mr. Sackville: Legislation provides that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may, with the consent of Treasury, but need not, accept payments from the national health service trust in discharge of part, but not all, of the public dividend capital. It is not currently policy to require such payments and accordingly no trust has been asked to make one.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the return-on-assets targets and returns for NHS trusts; and if these targets include the effect of interest charges.

Mr. Sackville: National health service trusts are required to make a 6 per cent. return on the value of their average net relevant assets. It is calculated as the percentage that a trust's operating surplus, before charging interest, bears to the average relevant net assets for the year.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what storage or disposal sites are operated by the national disposal services for radioactive materials and sources used by the NHS; which NHS agency operates this service; and if she will list the contractors approved by the service for replacing, recovering and transporting such sources.

Mr. Sackville: AEA Technology and British Nuclear Fuels plc—BNFL—accept wastes whose disposal via their services is permitted under an authorisation, or which is subject to the Radioactive Substances (Waste Closed Sources) Exemption Order 1962.

There is no national health service agency operating this service and information about contractors used is not available centrally.

Each hospital is responsible for the safe storage and disposal of any radioactive materials and sources that may be used as set out in authorisations issued to each hospital by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Primary Care Deprivation Allowances

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs of general practitioners' primary care deprivation allowances in each family health services authority area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The amounts paid in deprivation payments by family health services authorities in 1992-93, the last year for which figures are available, will be placed in the Library. The deprivation payments scheme was introduced with the 1990 general practitioner contract to recompense GPs for the higher potential work load generated by patients living in deprived areas. Payments are targeted on those practices that serve the areas of highest deprivation.

General Practitioners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure on health provision within general practitioners' budgets in each year since 1990-91 in cash and standard price terms.

Dr. Mawhinney: Gross current expenditure on the provision of general medical services, in both cash and constant prices, is included in table 20 of the 1994 Departmental Report (Cm 2512), copies of which are available in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many budget-holding practices there are in each of the London regional health authorities; and what percentage of the total number of general practitioner practices in London are budget-holding practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are 213 fundholding practices in the North Thames regional health authority and 339 in South Thames. 18 per cent. of the general practitioner practices within these two regions are fundholders.

Redundancies

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on redundancy packages in the health service which include a prohibition on the individual from commenting on his case.

Dr. Mawhinney: All settlements on termination should be open to public scrutiny irrespective of any confidentiality clause.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) part-time nurses employed in NHS hospitals by region for each of the last five years and the corresponding figures for part-time nurses employed in the community and by family doctors and (b) full-time nurses employed in NHS hospitals by region for each of the last five years and the corresponding figures for full-time nurses employed in the community and by family doctors.

Mr. Sackville: The information available will be placed in the Library.

This information excludes Project 2000 students where numbers were approximately 3,000, 10,500, 18,300 in 1990, 1991 and 1992 respectively.

Non-executive Members (Health Authorities)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to replace standardised rewards for non-executive members of health authorities with a payment by hour of attendance at national average earnings.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. Non-executive members receive a modest sum to help compensate for the time they contribute to the health authority. They are not salaried employees of the national health service and it would be inappropriate to treat them as such.

Cornwall Health

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now make a statement on legal costs and the current libel case involving the non-executive directors of Cornwall health.

Dr. Mawhinney: No decision has yet been made.

Secure Places

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of the local authorities in each region of England and Wales whose proposals to contribute towards the provision of the 170 additional secure places required for criminal justice proposals have been accepted.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is shown in the table. A number of further proposed projects are being held in reserve should any of the selected projects be withdrawn on planning or other grounds. It is currently anticipated that, subject to planning procedures, construction of 110 of the additional places could be completed by the end of 1995 and the balance by mid-1996.

Proposals brought forward by local authorities in England and Wales and included, in principle, in capital programme

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the key business targets for the Medicines Control Agency for 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: I have today placed copies of the 1994-95 key business targets for the Medicines Control Agency in the Library.

Patient Complaints

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the report of Professor Wilson on patient complaints; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The independent committee set up under Professor Wilson to review national health service complaints procedures has submitted its report. We will be announcing the results of the review and publishing the report for consultation shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Claimants, London

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) couples and (b) lone parents in each London borough claimed family credit in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make compensatory payments to those entitled in respect of value added tax on fuel bills for the period 1 April to 11 April which is not covered by the existing scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: None. The extra help is included in the 1994-95 benefit rates which become effective from the week commencing with the first Monday in the tax year in compliance with the statutory obligation imposed by section 150 of the Social Security Administration Act. In the case of the vast majority of claims, it will be available to recipients before their fuel bills become payable.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters or other representations about the Child Support Agency his Department has received in the agency's first year of operation or at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: Between April 1993 and 15 April 1994 the Department of Social Security headquarters and the Child Support Agency headquarters received 19,620 written representations covering a range of views about child support policy and Child Support Agency operations. The Child Support Agency's telephone line for Members of Parliament has received over 1,000 calls since it was set up in mid-December.

The number of written representations made to Child Support Agency centres and field offices is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that, where hon. Members request it, replies to specific inquiries relating to child support will be provided by him, rather than by the chief executive of the Child Support Agency; what criteria he uses when deciding which parliamentary inquiries will be provided by Ministers, and which will be referred to officials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 February 1994 at column 365. There are no plans to change the handling of correspondence from hon. Members.

Invalidity Benefit, Brighton

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals were in receipt of invalidity benefit within the Brighton borough council area for each consecutive year from 1986; and how much was paid out in invalidity benefit in each of those years.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 21 April 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients in Brighton.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because statistics did not identify separately invalidity benefit customers from sickness benefit customers until May 1991.

The Brighton Borough Council area corresponds very closely with the geographical area dealt with by the BA's Brighton District Office (DO). Statistics relating to the numbers of IVB customers appropriate to the Brighton DO area will provide a reasonably accurate figure for IVB recipients within the area in question.

However, from November 1992, IVB claims appropriate to the BA Lewes Branch Office (BO) area have also been dealt with at Brighton DO. Unfortunately statistics of IVB customers appropriate to each office area are not maintained and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Numbers of IVB recipients dealt with by Brighton DO at a point in time were as follows:

			Area
May	1991	2,137	Brighton DO area only
May	1992	2,556	Brighton DO area only
May	1993	4,243	Brighton DO and Lewes BO areas
March	1994,	4608	Brighton DO and Lewes BO areas

These figures were obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the DO at the last working day of each month.

Districts do not maintain records of the total amount of IVB paid to customers in any period. To establish the amount of benefit in payment at any point in time would involve disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Gower on 7 March regarding his constituent from Mumbles.

Mr. Hague: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 18 April.

Epilepsy

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new guidelines his Department has issued to adjudication officers for determining eligibility for disability living allowance with specific reference to sufferers from epilepsy.

Mr. Scott: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Pergau Dam

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legal advice he took before deciding to issue a directive to his accounting officer on expenditure on the Pergau dam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary explained the position in his evidence to the Foreign Affairs Committee. The ODA accounting officer sought a direction from him on the grounds of the prudent and economical administration of aid funds, but not because of any issue of propriety.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what indications there have been that the signatories have been more willing to allow unimpeded access for food and medical aid in Sudan following the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development talks in Nairobi; and what access there will be to the Nuba mountains for international relief organisations through Operation Lifeline Sudan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations has submitted proposals for access to 85 areas by air, 17 by road and four by river to the parties to the IGADD talks. The next scheduled talks are on 3 May.

In the Nuba mountains, Kadugli and Dillinge are now accessible to United Nations agencies. The United Nations has applied to the Government of Sudan for access to further areas.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what has been the level of Operation Lifeline Sudan in each of the years in which it has been operating; what is the level that the United Nations sees as necessary for this year; and what has been pledged by donor nations;

(2) who are the donors to Operation Lifeline Sudan; and how much they each contribute.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are seeking the information requested from the United Nations emergency units in Khartoum and Nairobi. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Laboratory Experimental Station, Conwy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if she will make a statement on the future of the fisheries laboratory experimental station in Conwy.

Mr. Jack: The fisheries laboratory at Conwy is one of the four laboratories that comprise the directorate of fisheries research—DFR. Like most public sector research establishments, DFR is subject to the efficiency scrutiny announced on 2 February 1994 by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. Within DFR a study is also taking place of all the directorate's laboratory sites to identify options and potential savings and efficiency gains which may be appropriate for the future.

Glanders and Farcy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the number of cases of glanders and farcy in each year since 1985.

Mr. Soames: The last recorded case of glanders or farcy, which are simply different forms of the same disease, was in 1928.

Racing Pigeons

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she will make a statement regarding the reasons for insisting on vaccination of racing pigeons.

Mr. Soames: The Racing Pigeons (Vaccination) Order 1994 requires that an organiser of a pigeon show or race which takes part wholly or partly in Great Britain shall ensure that all racing pigeons entered for the show have been vaccinated with a suitable vaccine against paramyxovirus 1—PMV1—in pigeons. This implements a specific requirement in Council directive 92/66/EEC on Community measures for the control of Newcastle disease which in turn, recognises the part that racing pigeons can play in spreading Newcastle disease to commercial poultry, either through direct contact or by passing the PMV virus to feral pigeons.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered over the past five years because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Mr. Brooke: Since my Department was formed in April 1992 it has declined to answer 14 questions on the ground of disproportionate cost or because the information requested was not held centrally.

As computer and operational systems continue to improve there will doubtless be increased potential for this number to decline.

National Lottery

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of the moneys allocated to them from the national lottery development fund he envisages should be the maximum spent on administrative costs by the five bodies selected by him to distribute the proceeds of the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: The proportion of net lottery proceeds spent by distributing bodies on administration costs will depend on the amounts allocated to them from the national lottery distribution fund and the total number of applications they have to process. Directions issued to the bodies under section 26(3) of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 will require them to secure value for money in the administration of lottery funds.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Citizenship

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of British citizens who do not wish to have European Union citizenship conferred on them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The treaty on European Union provides that every person holding the nationality of a member state shall be a citizen of the Union and there is no provision for a derogation from this article.

EU Foreign Ministers Meeting

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of EU Foreign Ministers on 18 and 19 April.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 21 April 1994]: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 18-19 April. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office also attended.

In their statement on former Yugoslavia, Ministers condemned the continuing Bosnian Serb attacks on Gorazde and called for an immediate ceasefire and the release of all detained United Nations personnel. They also called for an intensified diplomatic effort by the international community. This should involved the United Nations, the European Union, the United States and Russia. It would aim to ensure the convergence of their initiatives and to bring about talks between the parties at an early date based on the European Union plan and taking into account the Washington accord and the talks on the Krajinas. An association council with Cyprus was held in the margins.

The Council agreed a common position on the cohesion fund regulation which will govern the operations of the cohesion fund. The text will now be transmitted to the European Parliament for assent.

The President of the European Commission, Mr. Delors, gave a brief presentation to the Council on follow-up activity to the Commission's White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment. He said that the Commission would focus on improving the functioning of the single market, paying particular attention to the fiscal and regulatory environment for small and medium-sized enterprises.

The Commission presented ideas for enhancing the European Union relationship with Ukraine. Discussion will continue at a future FAC.

The Council adopted a package of interim measures for discussion with the future South African Government, intended to send a strong political signal in support of the transition to democracy. The measures include trade and economic co-operation, a special development co-operation programme and political dialogue. A long-term relationship will be discussed subsequently, should the new Government wish.

The Council agreed a joint action on the middle east to assist the European Union's policy of political and economic support for the middle east peace process. The text of the joint action is being deposited in the House Library.

Ministers agreed that preparations to launch the European Union's initiative for a pact on stability in Europe at a conference in Paris on 26-27 May were proceeding well. Ministers will review progress again at the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 May. The Council agreed provisional guidelines for financing actions under the common foreign and security policy.

The Commission introduced its proposal for a directive establishing the arrangements to allow citizens of the Union residing in a member state of which they are not nationals to vote and stand as a candidate in municipal elections. The proposal was broadly welcomed by the Council. There will be discussions in the Home Affairs Council on 21 April.

The Council welcomed applications for European Union membership from Poland and Hungary and invited the Commission to prepare its opinions on the applications.

The Council was unable to confirm an agreement reached in the Committee of Permanent Representatives on the application by The Guardian newspaper for access to a number of Council documents under the code of conduct on the right of access to information.

The Council underlined the importance of rapid completion of negotiations towards a partnership and co-operation agreement with Russia and invited the Commission to explore Russian proposals relating to trade in nuclear material.

The Council reached agreement on allocating the remaining European Union fish quotas gained under the European economic area—EEA—agreement. It agreed the internal allocation of North Norway cod among Spain, Portugal and Ireland; and Icelandic redfish among the United Kingdom, Germany, Belgium and France.

The Council heard a report on the state of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development negotiations on state aids for shipbuilding. The Council hoped that the negotiations, which were approaching a conclusion, could be finalised soon. The Council emphasised the importance of an agreement permitting competition rules to function better.

The Council remitted the Commission request to send its draft decision for concluding the Uruguay round to the European Parliament to COREPER for examination.

Germany made a statement reserving its right to pursue its case against the EC banana regime in the European Court of Justice and to object to the proposed changes agreed with the Latin Americans. Belgium, Denmark, Luxembourg and the Netherlands associated themselves with the statement.

No formal vote was taken.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 445, concerning the nature of the contacts between his Office and that of Mr. Delors, if he will state the names and offices of the persons giving and receiving the respective assurances; and if he will place a copy of the recipients' notes in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made clear in the House on 30 March, and as my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office made clear on 12 April, the assurances we received from the Commission were given with the full authority of Mr. Delors. The discussions between the Commission and ourselves were conducted on a confidential basis and I do not intend to breach their confidentiality. Nor do I see any need to do so: we have informed the House fully of the outcome of those discussions.

SCOTLAND

Co-operatives

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he intends to put in place to encourage the development of co-operatives in the manufacturing, distribution, wholesale, retail, marketing, finance and housing sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 10 February 1994 and to that of my hon. Friend the Minister responsible for education and housing in Scotland dated 17 February 1994.

In order to encourage the development of marketing co-operatives the Government will introduce, later this year, the marketing development scheme, which is intended to help producers and processors improve their marketing and commercial expertise. In addition the Scottish Agricultural Society receives Government funding to carry out on behalf of the Scottish Office co-operative development work among farmers.

The Government's Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill provides a general deregulatory power which will enable burden on business to be removed by secondary legislation. The illustrative list of uses for this general power, published alongside the Bill, includes proposals for credit unions and industrial and provident societies. These measures, when implemented, will remove restrictions on co-operatives and enable them to streamline their procedures. That, in turn, should encourage the continued growth of the sector.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to require local enterprise companies to publish and make available to the public a corporate plan or any other mechanism to increase the information available to the public about their activities.

Mr. Stewart: The local enterprise companies are required by their operating contracts with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to publish synopses of their operating and business plans—analogous to a corporate plan—in addition to their annual reports and accounts. They are further required to publicise and hold annually a meeting open to members of the public.

Infertility Treatment

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those hospitals which have contracts with purchasers to provide infertility treatments, giving their average and lengthiest waiting times for first appointments and commencement of treatment for (a) those on the hospital's own list, (b) those who are accepted for treatment under a contractual arrangement with a fundholding GP and (c) those who are accepted under a contractual arrangement with a health board outside its own area;

(2) if he will list the average waiting time for infertility treatment to begin at each hospital providing this service, in each year since such services began.

Mr. Stewart: Hospitals which have contracts in 1994-95 to provide infertility services are listed. Information on waiting times for first appointments and commencement of infertility treatment is not held centrally.

Bus Manufacturing Industry

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in the bus manufacturing industry in Scotland in 1984; and what is the current total.

Mr. Stewart: There is no information available from official sources in the form requested.

Knives

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) charges and (b) convictions there have been under the Carrying of Knives etc. (Scotland) Act 1993 in each of the police authority areas of Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 April 1994]: Information on the number of charges is not collected centrally. Information on the number of persons proceeded against and convicted where the main charge was an offence under the Carrying of Knives etc. (Scotland) Act 1993 will not be available until later this year.

Prison Escort Services

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners have escaped while under escort in each of the past seven years; in how many such cases discipline charges were proceeded against those officers carrying out the escort duties; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 April 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 22 April 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the number of escapes of prisoners from escorts in the last 7 years and in how many such cases discipline charges were proceeded against officers carrying out escorting duties.

The information requested on the number of escapes is published annually in the Scottish Prison Service Annual Reports and is as follows:

Escapes from escorts

Year	Prisoners	Young offenders
1987	10	20
[1]1988-89	26	15
1989-90	9	9
1990-91	13	12
1991-92	14	5
1992-93	24	5
1993-94	9	3

[1] 15-month period.

To provide figures for the number of cases where discipline charges were instituted within the last 7 years would only be achieved at disproportionate cost. The figure for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1994 is 14.

Police (Privatisation)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of whether there are sections of the police service that could be operated by the private sector; and what proposals he has for any such initiatives.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend keeps under review value for money in the police service, including whether any tasks undertaken by police forces could be fulfilled by other agencies, but he has at present no proposals in this area.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what role he sees for market testing in the police service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government intend to extend compulsory competitive tendering to maintenance and repair of police motor vehicles and to cleaning of police buildings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Improper Trading Practices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many actions have been brought in the United Kingdom each year as a result of article 86 of the EEC treaty.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am aware of three cases before the English courts in 1993 in which pleadings involved article 86 of the EC treaty. Information for earlier years is not readily available.

Main decisions and measures taken by the Commission of the European Communities under the competition provisions of the EC treaty are described in the Commission's annual reports on competition policy which are available in the Library of the House.

Copyright

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken by the Board of Trade to ensure copyright protection and enforcement is being carried out or prepared in (a) eastern Europe and (b) China.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are fully supporting European Community initiatives to achieve effective protection of copyright in eastern Europe, since we believe that this is now the most effective way of bringing influence to bear in that area. Six countries in the region —Bulgaria, the Czech and Slovak Republics, Hungary, Poland and Romania—have now signed association agreements with the Community, a specific condition of which is that both the level of intellectual property protection and the means of enforcing rights must be brought up to a standard comparable to that in the Community.

My Department has also been active over several years in making representations to the Chinese authorities to the effect that China should enact copyright laws conforming to international standards of protection, which they have now done. China's recent accession to the Berne copyright convention and the phonograms convention means that China is obliged to protect British and other foreign rights owners under their new laws to at least the same standard as their own nationals, and the Government will take up with the Chinese authorities any failure to meet these obligations where clear evidence exists.

Moreover, the recently concluded general agreement on tariffs and trade sets standards both on the level of copyright protection and on its enforcement, and includes remedies for failure to meet these standards. China hopes to become a party to the GATT and will, therefore, be expected to abide by these standards.

"Economy in Government" Competition

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the guidelines used to ensure political impartiality in relation to the Adam Smith Institute's "Economy in Government" competition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 April 1994]: The Department of Trade and Industry has no connection with the competition. Members of staff wishing to enter in a private capacity are still subject to the normal rules of conduct applying to civil servants including the duty of confidentiality and the need to avoid political controversy.

Private Security Firms

Mr. George: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many private security firms have been employed by his Department for each of the last 10 years; what has been the annual value of the contracts; and if he will estimate how many guards have been employed for each of those years.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Firework Injuries

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish statistics for firework injuries for 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 21 April 1994]: I published the statistics for firework injuries for 1993 on 20 April in answer to a written question from my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks), Official Report, column 518.

Professor Peter Moizer

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he secured the secondment of Professor Peter Moizer; what are the terms of the secondment, its objectives and its cost to his Department; whether Professor Moizer will seek public evidence or hold public hearings in making his report; and if his final report will be made public.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Professor Moizer was engaged after a normal competitive tendering process to assist my Department in its review of the monitoring regimes of the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors. The professor accepted a standard DTI contract of service; it is not my Department's policy to reveal the cost of individual contract engagements. Professor Moizer has submitted his report to the Department. I believe that it will be useful to all concerned if, in due course, as much of the report as possible is made public.

Sizewell B

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the reason for the delay in the opening of the Sizewell B nuclear plant.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric remains confident that Sizewell B will be brought into operation ahead of its committed 72-month timetable.

Coal Industry Privatisation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about future redundancy payments for mineworkers after 30 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Both my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade and I meet the chairman of British Coal as necessary to discuss a wide variety of matters affecting the coal industry, including the funding of British Coal's redundancy arrangements. I understand that British Coal has told the unions that it will inform them as soon as possible of its proposals for redundancy arrangements for industrial workers to apply after 30 April.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to extend redundancy schemes and payments for mineworkers after the privatisation of British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Any redundancy arrangements after the privatisation of British Coal, including any in excess of the statutory requirements, will be a matter for private sector employers. Under the Coal Industry Bill, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 will apply where there is a transfer of an undertaking or part of an undertaking. In such circumstances, the terms and conditions under contracts of employment at the time of transfer will transfer to the successor companies.

In accordance with TUPE, British Coal will consult trade union representatives about any proposed transfers. The details about what will, or will not transfer, including redundancy terms in excess of the statutory requirements, depend on the specific facts of each case, and are best pursued in the course of those consultations.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the planned payments to the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation for the next 10 years and comparable payments made during the last five years expressed at constant prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's proposals for the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation involve assured funding of £15 million—£5 million taking the form of an annual payment of £1 million for five years, and £10 million taking the form of a capital endowment, the income of which would be available for current expenditure. The funding of CISWO for the past five years has been a matter for British Coal.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance he plans to make available to companies that buy collieries after the privatisation of British Coal to fund redundancy payments.

Mr. Eggar: I have no such plans.

Racecourse Holdings Trust

Mr. Meale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer the recent acquisition by the Racecourse Holdings Trust of United Racecourse (Holdings) Ltd. to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In accordance with advice from the Director General of Fair Trading, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced on 25 February 1994 his decision not to refer the proposed acquisition by Racecourse Holdings Trust Ltd. of United Racecourses (Holdings) Ltd. to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission because it did not raise competition or other relevant concerns warranting scrutiny by the MMC.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Commonwealth Law Conference

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General what staff of his Department attended the Commonwealth law conference in Cyprus during September 1993.

The Attorney-General: No member of my chambers attended the Commonwealth law conference in Cyprus in May 1993. However, the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Director of the Serious Fraud Office both attended.

DEFENCE

United Kingdom Forces

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications of the United Kingdom's membership of the European Union for the command and deployment of United Kingdom forces.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom's membership of the European Union has no direct implications for the command and deployment of United Kingdom forces, as the EU has no current jurisdiction in the defence field. The EU has placed responsibility for developing and implementing its decisions which have defence implications upon the Western European Union. The WEU is an autonomous organisation, and not all members of the EU are full members of the WEU. The WEU is being developed as the defence component of the EU and as a means of strengthening the European pillar of NATO, which remains fundamental to ensuring European security and stability. Development of the WEU is likely to have implications for the command and control of United Kingdom forces involved in operations with other European allies. In future such operations may take place under the control of the WEU, using assets shared with NATO.

Military Exercises

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for increasing the separation between controlled airspace and areas used for military exercises.

Mr. Hanley: The responsibility for such matters lies with the National Air Traffic Services with which my Department works closely in order to ensure that all aspects of civil and military flight safety are fully taken into account. There are currently no such proposals, but the use of airspace is kept under continuous review.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to announce new orders for replacement ships for the Royal Fleet Auxiliary.

Mr. Aitken: As part of our ongoing programme to maintain an up-to-date Royal Fleet Auxiliary, we invited tenders on 6 April for certain aspects of the feasibility studies for new auxiliary oilers. These vessels are planned to replace the "O" class front-line tankers around the turn of the century.

D-day Anniversary

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with ex-service men's organisations about financial barriers faced by veterans to participation in celebrations of the 50th anniversary of D-day; what proposals he has to make financial assistance available to such vererans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no formal responsibility for ex-service men's or widows' organisations, which are privately funded, and we are not therefore in a position to provide financial assistance to those who wish to travel to the 50th anniversary commemorations.

There is, however, separate provision in the form of the widows grant-in-aid scheme which has been running for 10 years. The scheme provides financial assistance to those widows who lost their husbands overseas between 1914 and 1967 to make one visit to the grave or memorial as appropriate.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the numbers of veterans of D-day who are currently living; what assessment he has made of the numbers of those vererans who would welcome the opportunity to visit the site of their involvement; and what specific action he is taking to facilitate such visits.

Mr. Hanley: The number of D-day veterans who are currently living is not known. There are some 9,000 to 10,000 members of the Normandy Veterans Association, but there will be other D-day veterans who are not members of the NVA.

The level of interest in those events being managed by my Department, both in the Portsmouth area and in Normandy, is high. We have had over 12,000 applications for tickets for the ceremonies in Normandy. The numbers in the Portsmouth area are difficult to judge because one of the events—the Drumhead service on Southsea common on the morning of 5 June 1994—is open to the general public.

Although veterans and veterans' organisations should make their own arrangements for transport and accommodation, my Department is liaising with the appropriate authorities in Portsmouth and in Normandy to ensure they have a successful visit.

Homosexuality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the new regulations in respect of the treatment of homosexuality in the armed forces; and what is the rationale behind these proposed new regulations.

Mr. Hanley: As foreshadowed in my closing speech during the debate on discipline in the armed forces on 21 June 1993, Official Report, column 143, new tri-service guidelines have been drawn up to reflect current policy and procedure. These new guidelines, a copy of which have been placed in the Library of the House, were distributed down the services' chain of command in March 1994.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Consultants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information technology consultants his Department has employed and for what purpose and at what total cost for each of the last five years.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by county, the total numbers on housing waiting lists in Northern Ireland categorised as urgent need or A1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by its chief executive that the information requested is available only by Housing Executive region. The numbers of applicants with A1 status at 31 March 1994 were as follows:—

NI housing executive region	A1 applicants
Belfast	557
South East	325
South	156
North East	214
West	438
Total	1,690

Trust Boards

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria social workers will have to meet before being eligible for employment by the new trust boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Social workers employed by HSS trusts in Northern Ireland will have to meet exactly the same criteria in terms of professional qualifications as social workers employed by the health and social services board in the units of management which remain under the direct management control of boards.

Homelessness

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretaryof State for Northern Ireland if he will list by county the total numbers of (a) families, (b) single men and (c) single women in Northern Ireland, who were registered as homeless during 1993 and 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by its chief executive that the information is only available in relation to A1 priority status, by Housing Executive region. The numbers of applicants accepted as homeless during the period 1 April 1993 to 28 February 1994 were:

Northern Ireland housing executive region	Number of applicants accepted as homeless
	(a) Families	(b) Single men	(c) Single women	(d) couples without children	(e) Total
Belfast	495	169	177	36	877
South East	404	91	134	51	680
South	299	71	103	35	508
North East	361	93	117	34	605
West	545	122	186	69	922
Total	2,104	546	717	225	3,592

A further 2,947 applicants were accepted as homeless during the period but were not deemed to be in priority need and not therefore classified as above.

Transport Licensing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the work undertaken by the transport licensing enforcement officers in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: This small but dedicated team of officers works very effectively, in occasionally difficult circumstances, to enforce the licensing requirements of both the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967, and the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Their efforts are appreciated by the legitimate haulage and passenger carrying operators who are best placed to provide the public with the services which they require in these important market sectors. The Public Accounts Committee also recently commented favourably on the value of this enforcement effort in its report on road safety in Northern Ireland—1993-94 Session, 13th report.

Policing Costs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost per head of population (a) for Northern Ireland and (b) for the United Kingdom of policing the border with the Republic of Ireland; and what estimates he has made of the comparable cost to the Republic of Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is not available.

United Ireland (Economic Benefits)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the economic benefits of a United Ireland (a) to the island of Ireland and (b) to Great Britain.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: None.

Electricity Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the major interruptions to electricity supply in the constituency of South Down which have occurred since 1 April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: None. This is a matter for Northern Ireland Electricity plc in the first instance. In the event that NIE should fail to provide a satisfactory answer the matter can be pursued by the Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland.

Neil Latimer

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current position on the case of Neil Latimer; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: When I responded to the Adjournment debate initiated by the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) on 23 February, Official Report, columns 408-16, I described my statutory power to refer a case to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland. The criterion which I would normally expect to be satisfied if I were to refer a case is that there should be some new evidence, or other consideration of substance, which has not previously been before the court and which now appears to cast doubt on the safety of the conviction. I also reiterated the central principle that it is not for Ministers to substitute their own assessment of the evidence in a particular case for that of the courts.

My predecessor referred the cases of Mr. Latimer and his co-accused to the Court of Appeal because forensic tests showed that notes of police interviews with the appellants had been altered and falsely authenticated. Since Mr. Latimer's appeal was dismissed in July 1992 I have received a number of representations asking me again to refer his case to the Court of Appeal, but none has so far provided sufficient grounds to justify such a reference.

I am at present obtaining advice on the further material referred to during the debate and will, as I undertook on 23 February, continue to give these matters the very careful consideration that they merit.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 241

SESSION 1993–94

12th April—22nd April 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
